"A DAUGHTER OF JEZEBEL, OR THE BLACKMAILERS OF COTHAM," NEXT WEEK

THE CHICAGO LEDGER

VOL. XXXI, NO. 35. CHICAGO, ILL., SATURDAY, AUGUST 29, 1903. Single Copies 5 Cents.

LINKS OF LOVE AND GOLD; OR, THE GREY-OSMOND DUEL.

BY COLONEL PRENTISS INGRAHAM

"Who are you, fellow?" said Gerald sternly.

(Copyright, 1903, by W. D. Boyce Co.)

CHAPTER I.

Two persons stood beneath the shadow of a spreading oak, and in full view of a lordly mansion rising above a forest of foliage, just tinted with the brown and golden hues of autumn.

One was a man of splendid physique, handsome, young, and an officer of the English army, though now dressed in a civilian's suit.

The other was a maiden over whose sunny-hued curls scarcely seventeen years had fallen—yet a child-woman of rare loveliness and depth of feeling, and whose faultless form was attired in a light gray robe of soft material.

In her hands she held a sun-hat and across her arm hung a Roman scarf of many colors.

But upon her fair face rested a look of earnest sadness, as her eyes were turned upward. Gazing straight into the face of her companion, she said, in soft, reproachful tones:

"It was wrong for you to come here, Gerald Grey—"

The maiden paused and the soldier said, bitterly:

"Say what you intended, Ione—after my killing your Cousin Ferd in a duel."

"I did not wish to wound you, Gerald; but now that you have yourself referred to that sad affair I will speak; it was wrong of you to come here."

"I know it, Ione; but I could not help it. I came to see you, to tell you with my own lips I was not to blame in that affair. Nay, more, did not the court-martial clear me yesterday? That is, they suspended me for but six months from service—a light punishment."

"Yes, a light punishment from the court-martial; but, oh, how heavy the punishment to yourself; you have taken human life, Gerald, the life of my own kindred."

"Aye, but he brought it upon himself."

"You could have avoided the meeting, Gerald?"

"You may think so, Ione; but Ferd Osmond came to me and asked if it were true that I sought your hand when it was well known that you had been his betrothed from the very cradle? I answered that it was a well-known fact that you did not love him, and only intended marrying him from a sense of duty to your father, and he asked how I knew this? I replied, stung as I was by his manner. From Ione's own lips." Instantly came his answer:

"Gerald Grey, you lie!"

"You know what followed, Ione. I knocked him down; he sent me a challenge which I accepted reluctantly, for I did not wish to face one who held the same blood in his veins that you had, with deadly intent. The first fire I spared him, although he wounded me slightly in the arm. He demanded another fire, and—I killed him."

"Would to God, Gerald, it had never happened. But, believe me, I do not blame you. I pity you and love you still; but all else of the name of Osmond hate you."

"I care little for their hate; it is your love I want, Ione; aye, and you shall yet be mine."

"I fear that dream is ended, Gerald, and your own hand broke the link. Had you waited, perhaps Cousin Ferd would have released me, and all would have been well."

"Never! I knew Ferd Osmond too well. He would never have yielded you, and thereby lost a large fortune. Death alone broke his claim upon you, Ione; but I learn that your father has been ordered to India."

"Yes, we leave within the week."

"What! Do you go?"

"Yes; he would not leave me here, where he fears I might be kidnaped by a certain handsome young officer in the Dragoons."

"He shows sound judgment in taking you with him; but this does not thwart me, if you still love me, Ione."

"I can never love any one else, Gerald; you are all I have to love, for father is so cold and stern—"

"Then, Ione, look for me within the year in India. I will exchange into your father's regiment as soon as my term of suspension is up."

"What mean you, Gerald?" cried the maiden, a glad light coming into her eyes.

"Just what I say. Within the year I will be in service in India, and then if I cannot win your father's consent to our marriage, why, I'll take you anyhow, if—"

"If what, Gerald?"

"If you remain true to me, Ione."

"I will ever be true to you, Gerald, in spite of all ill reports, all stories of your reckless, wild career, I have never doubted you.

"Bless you, my darling. Now, farewell; no, au revoir, for we will meet in India."

A tender parting followed and then with tear-dimmed eyes, Ione Osmond, the daughter of an English nobleman, watched the lover glide quietly away through the trees, mount his patiently waiting steed, and with a wafted kiss from his finger tips canter from sight down the highway.

Then, with slow step and saddened face, Ione turned and retraced her way to the stately mansion which had been the home of the Osmonds for many generations, and where she had lived from her babyhood with her stern, cold father only to watch over her, for her mother had died when her infant daughter was but a week old.

CHAPTER II.

Lying at full length in a swinging hammock, suspended between two trees, and apparently wrapped in the enjoyment of the latest novel, while his brow was fanned by the soft breeze from the sea, Gerald seemed to have no care in life, for upon his handsome face rested no shadow to show that he was haunted by cruel memories of a green grave in a far-away land—the last resting place of Percy Osmond.

True to his word, Gerald Grey had exchanged into another regiment, and relinquishing the delights of English life at home, had sought dangerous and arduous service in India, drawn thither by the talisman—Love.

Unmindful of the dark frown that greeted his arrival from Colonel Edgar Osmond, to whom he reported, Gerald remembered only the glad look that came upon Ione's face at sight of him, and determined to give his noble, commander no cause for complaint, he set to work at once in the discharge of his duties; and, in the three months he had been in India, the Colonel had found no cause for a reprimand, but, on the contrary, had been forced to publicly compliment him for his gallantry and daring service Captain Grey had rendered against the cruel enemy.

The good a soldier to allow personal hatred to influence him in the duty was considered Lord Osmond had, on each occasion on which he was designating, bestowed full praise on the gallant captain; but he had not forgotten the death of his nephew at the hands of that dashing captain, and how that death had thwarted all his plans to marry the daughter to Percy and secure, thereby, money and his marriage with his cousin, was to inherit vast wealth from his father.

Having returned from a scout in the hills after rebellious Sepoys, with his usual good success, bringing in a number of prisoners, Gerald Grey had taken his hammock and sought a cool spot in which to lounge for the balance of the afternoon.

As he threw, half asleep, he was suddenly aroused by voices and footsteps, approaching on the other side of the thick hedge that divided him from an unfrequented path.

"There are two of them, and I recognize the voice of Colonel Osmond. What can he be here?" muttered the young officer.

Presently the two persons halted just on the other side of the hedge from Gerald Grey, and the voice of the elder of the commander said, sharply:

"Again I ask, why is it I see you here?"

A coarse voice replied, sullenly:

"When I wrote to you some time since, my lord, I told you I'd visit you ere long, if you didn't send me a hundred pounds; you refused to send it, and I'm here."

"And, why, sirrah?" sternly asked the Colonel.

"You don't mean to say you don't remember me, my lord?"

"Years ago you were employed on my estate, and I discharged you for some villainous deed, was it not?"

"Doubtless, my lord. You discharged me because some one swore a false oath against me. But I did you no harm; nay, I was the one wronged by you."

"Fellow, I came not here to parley with you. You asked me to come that I might lose something to my advantage, and I am here."

"Yes, my lord; but if you had not felt that you had deeply wronged me in your past you would not have come."

"How have I wronged you, fellow?"

"As you memory is long, my lord, I will refresh it. Do you remember Constance Moore?"

"Ha! an instant Gerald Grey heard no reply; then it came with a slight tremor of voice:

"Yes; she was the lodge-keeper's daughter; what knowest you of her?"

"Yes; Constance Moore was the daughter of the lodge-keeper at Osmond Hall—a beautiful girl, worthy of a better fate. Yes; she was my wife, my lord, and your mistress."

"Liar! How dare you make this assertion?"

"I tell you that which is true. Poor Constance trusted to your promise and husband's noble, and refused my offer of marriage. Hold, my lord, I have a letter of the poor girl for you to digest—she loved you, and you would not marry a poor lodge-keeper's daughter. Oh, no! but you dragged her down to ruin."

"Ah! nay, liar!"

"No; I tell the truth, my lord. You hid her shame by forcing her to marry me, for you knew how dearly I loved her."

"Fellow, I will listen to your charges no longer; I will place you under arrest, and—"

"You would do no such thing, for I would then make public all that I have to tell you.

"None would believe you."

"Yes; I have proofs of all I would tell. Will you hear me, my lord?"

"No; or—"

"At the time that my wife gave birth to your child, my lord, your beautiful bride also brought into the world a little infant. That your little child—daughter the nurse told you could not live—it must die within a few days, she said, for it was fearfully deformed.

"Then, what did you do, my lord? Why, you knew that poor Constance was that night expected to give birth to a child, and you sent the nurse there to take care of her bribed with gold enough to keep her tongue still.

"Then all went well, for the gold made the nurse skilful in deception, and an exchange of infants was made, but two persons being the wiser besides yourself, the doctor and the old woman who aided you in your crime."

"Fellow, where have you trumped up all this story against me?" angrily asked Colonel Osmond, while Gerald Grey, in breathless interest, continued, an unsuspected hearer, scarcely daring to breathe lest he should be discovered.

"You don't know all, my lord; only hear me through. My supposed child died, as had been predicted, but the other one lived, though never to be fondled by the noble lady she now believes was her mother, for your wife died within the week, as you know.

"My wife lived to mourn for her little baby, for she knew not of the deception; but poor Constance, who had suffered at your treatment of her, and being bound to a false marriage with me, grieved so that she love, faded slowly away, and before the year was out was laid in the grave beside her little child—your daughter, my lord."

"Then my lord, with me before your eyes to remind me of your crimes, you could not but hate me, and when I, still in your debt, charged from your service on account of some stories trumped up against me—"

"And hence have you come here with a pack of lies to force money out of me as a revenge?"

"Not exactly. I came here to tell you then how matters stood, remembering I professed her sin against me; but I promised not to let you know, and determined to do so still, when nine years after, old Doctor Long was dying and sent for me, and I learned from him that you had confessed upon me, it was hard for me not to take vengeance.

"He, Doctor Long, told me that the nurse would come to him, and upon his agreement I wrote out for him, and to which he affixed his signature, I then sought the nurse woman, who, though she was comfortably on an income you allow her, she dare not refuse to sign the document, and set out to gain from you a sum that will support me in the style of a gentleman, but he had not forgotten the death of his nephew at the hands of that dashing captain, Gerald, and how that death had thwarted all his plans to marry the daughter to Percy and secure, thereby, money and his marriage with his cousin, was to inherit vast wealth from his father.

Having returned from a scout in the hills after rebellious Sepoys, with his usual good success, bringing in a number of prisoners, Gerald Grey had taken his hammock and sought a cool spot in which to lounge for the balance of the afternoon.

As he threw, half asleep, he was suddenly aroused by voices and footsteps, approaching on the other side of the thick hedge that divided him from an unfrequented path.

"There are two of them, and I recognize the voice of Colonel Osmond. What can he be here?" muttered the young officer.

Presently the two persons halted just on the other side of the hedge from Gerald Grey, and the voice of the elder of the commander said, sharply:

"Again I ask, why is it I see you here?"

A coarse voice replied, sullenly:

"When I wrote to you some time since, my lord, I told you I'd visit you ere long, if you didn't send me a hundred pounds; you refused to send it, and I'm here."

"And, why, sirrah?" sternly asked the Colonel.

"You don't mean to say you don't remember me, my lord?"

"Years ago you were employed on my estate, and I discharged you for some villainous deed, was it not?"

"Doubtless, my lord. You discharged me because some one swore a false oath against me. But I did you no harm; nay, I was the one wronged by you."

"Fellow, I came not here to parley with you. You asked me to come that I might lose something to my advantage, and I am here."

"Yes, my lord; but if you had not felt that you had deeply wronged me in your past you would not have come."

"How have I wronged you, fellow?"

"As you memory is long, my lord, I will refresh it. Do you remember Constance Moore?"

"Yes; she was the lodge-keeper's daughter; what knowest you of her?"

"Yes; Constance Moore was the daughter of the lodge-keeper at Osmond Hall—a beautiful girl, worthy of a better fate. Yes; she was my wife, my lord, and your mistress."

"Liar! How dare you make this assertion?"

"I tell you that which is true. Poor Constance trusted to your promise and husband's noble, and refused my offer of marriage. Hold, my lord, I have a letter of the poor girl for you to digest—she loved you, and you would not marry a poor lodge-keeper's daughter. Oh, no! but you dragged her down to ruin."

"Ah! nay, liar!"

"No; I tell the truth, my lord. You hid her shame by forcing her to marry me, for you knew how dearly I loved her."

"Fellow, I will listen to your charges no longer; I will place you under arrest, and—"

"You would do no such thing, for I would then make public all that I have to tell you.

"None would believe you."

"Yes; I have proofs of all I would tell. Will you hear me, my lord?"

"No; or—"

"At the time that my wife gave birth to your child, my lord, your beautiful bride also brought into the world a little infant. That your little child—daughter the nurse told you could not live—it must die within a few days, she said, for it was fearfully deformed.

"Then, what did you do, my lord? Why, you knew that poor Constance was that night expected to give birth to a child, and you sent the nurse there to take care of her bribed with gold enough to keep her tongue still.

"Then all went well, for the gold made the nurse skilful in deception, and an exchange of infants was made, but two persons being the wiser besides yourself, the doctor and the old woman who aided you in your crime."

"Fellow, where have you trumped up all this story against me?" angrily asked Colonel Osmond, while Gerald Grey, in breathless interest, continued, an unsuspected hearer, scarcely daring to breathe lest he should be discovered.

"You don't know all, my lord; only hear me through. My supposed child died, as had been predicted, but the other one lived, though never to be fondled by the noble lady she now believes was her mother, for your wife died within the week, as you know.

"My wife lived to mourn for her little baby, for she knew not of the deception; but poor Constance, who had suffered at your treatment of her, and being bound to a false marriage with me, grieved so that she love, faded slowly away, and before the year was out was laid in the grave beside her little child—your daughter, my lord."

"Then my lord, with me before your eyes to remind me of your crimes, you could not but hate me, and when I, still in your debt, charged from your service on account of some stories trumped up against me—"

"And hence have you come here with a pack of lies to force money out of me as a revenge?"

"Not exactly. I came here to tell you then how matters stood, remembering I professed her sin against me; but I promised not to let you know, and determined to do so still, when nine years after, old Doctor Long was dying and sent for me, and I learned from him that you had confessed upon me, it was hard for me not to take vengeance.

"He, Doctor Long, told me that the nurse would come to him, upon his agreement I wrote out for him, and to which he affixed his signature.

way down the hillside and in a short time was at the guard-house.

"Scott, I would see the prisoner; has any one spoken with him?" he asked the sentinel on guard.

"No one, sir," and turning the key of the door, he admitted the officer into the room where the prisoner was confined.

Donald Greene lay upon a low bench and his face was very pale, and Gerald Grey discovered by the light through the grating.

He was ironed hand and foot and arose slowly as the officer entered the room.

"Well, sir, I have come to have a talk with you."

"To laugh in my face at the trap you have me in, I suppose, for you well know my words will not be taken against yours," said the man, sullenly.

"Yet you can make a good case by telling the whole story of Lord Osmond's crime—your wife's dishonor and the illegitimacy of Lady Ione."

"True, and prove all that I say; but I will never allow the world to know that my poor wife was dishonored. I loved her too dearly for that—yes, I love her yet. No, the world shall never learn her sin from me. I will die first."

Gerald Grey's face flushed at the words of the prisoner. Though a poor, wretched Vagabond, he was yet too honorable about a woman who had deceived him.

"You will assuredly be hung, then, my man."

"So be it. I will not swear against my wife. I will tell frankly that I sought to obtain money from Colonel Osmond, or the count of a wrong he had once done me, and that I was to receive a yearly income; that is by far

WHEN BULLETS FLEW;

Or, The Story of a Confederate Girl.

BY FRANCES K. BREEDIN.

(Copyright by W. D. Boyce Co.)

Begun In No. 22, Aug. 15. Subscriptions can begin with that issue, or back copies can be procured from newsdealers, or our agents, or by mail from office of publication.

PART III.

Ridgeway Court is about four miles from Savannah, and before the war was considered one of the most beautiful places in the South.

The grounds are extensive, and grand old trees in groups of three and four are scattered over the green, velvety lawn; while on avenue of magnolia and pomegranate trees lead to the house. Around the garden is a beautiful rose geranium hedge, and in it every variety of lovely flowers, making it a paradise for the humming-birds and bees and butterflies. At the foot of the lawn is another hedge of cape jasmine, planted some distance from the house, because of its powerful odor.

There are large trees of tea olive, the blossoms of which perfume the whole place. It is one of the sweetest of Southern flowers, and, it is said, the Chinese use it to make fragrant their tea. At a short distance from the house are several greenhouses, and it was from one of these Claire Legare won a corsage bouquet one morning in the spring when Hampton met her. She was dressed in pale blue cashmere, trimmed with old valenciennes lace and blue ribbons. A bunch of apple geranium in her hand she was busily engaged pinning in front of her bodice.

Breakfast is waiting for you," said he, giving her a look of admiration.

She was so dainty and fair, and her eyes seemed to match her gown. Her little feet were encased in blue kid slippers, and as she held up her gown one could see the pretty silk stockings embroidered in blue dots.

"Why did you not sit down?" she said. "It is not a ceremonious meal."

"I would have done so, but Gerald seemed rather shocked at our even suggesting such a thing when you were known to be downstairs."

"Gerald is a goose; but let us make haste or everything will be cold."

"Except his welcome," he replied, in a teasing tone.

"Do not be disagreeable so early in the morning; you will be so all day."

"Will it make any difference to you? No doubt you have planned a walk or drive with Gerald."

She had blushed when his name was first mentioned, and he now noticed her pretty confusion when Gerald met her at the door and took her to the breakfast table.

At the time there were only a few in the house; a large party having promised to come the first week at Ridgeway Court meant a dozen besides the home people.

Mrs. Ridgeway was a very elegant woman of an imposing appearance. She was about fifty-five years old; but looked only forty, with no gray hairs, nor any sign of old age. She had been a widow for many years, and Hampton was her only child. He was her idol and always sat her right hand at the table and the old friend of the family took the foot.

Claire's vivacity of manner made her the life of the party. She could not be called an intellectual woman, but she conversed well on the topics of the day, and was a great help to Mrs. Ridgeway in entertaining her numerous guests.

The conversation turned on the late war, Hampton waxed eloquent on his description of the women of Virginia.

"It is a wonder you are not captured, old fellow," one of the men remarked.

"Superior attractions in Georgia," responded another.

Claire, in a low tone, said to Gerald:

"He did lose his heart. He has not been the same man since his return."

"Was it the nurse who wrought the change?"

"I am sure of it, for he gets angry whenever I tease him about her."

After breakfast the guests dispersed; some to drive or to ride and others to walk. It was Liberty Hall, and no one was expected to give an account of his movements until they all assembled at the six o'clock dinner; and not even then unless he chose.

As Hampton predicted, Claire and Gerald went for a walk.

"Not to make you a false prophet," she said, as he smiled significantly when they started.

Gerald Huger was a distant cousin of Claire's, and from her earliest childhood she had gone to Gray Grove in South Carolina once a year, as Mrs. Huger had been her mother's most intimate friend.

Before the war Hampton had thought their affection the most natural thing in the world, but since his return he had noticed more closely and was convinced they were in love with each other.

As low as her tone was he had heard her remarks to Gerald at the breakfast table, and it made him think he might be mistaken. From pique at his indifference she might be pretending not to care for him. He was conscious of a great change in his manner since his return from Virginia.

That afternoon he was determined to find out how she felt toward him. She was sitting in a low rocking chair engaged in some kind of fancy work. He went over, picked up her ball of worsted, and began to talk of old times.

"Hush, please, I must count my stitches."

"Am I only to sit and look at you?" he asked.

"One, two, three, four," she continued, without answering.

"Do, pray, stop," said he, "why do you bring such work into the drawing room?"

"To keep off disagreeable men," she retorted.

"Do you mean that for me?" he asked.

"If the cap fits wear it."

"I have worn a fool's cap long enough," said he, as he went over and took a seat by his mother.

After breakfast the next morning he told Claire he wished to have a business talk with her in the library.

"Hateful old business! Can't it wait?"

"No; it must be settled at once."

When she entered he was smoking; but he threw away his cigar, and placed a chair near the window.

"Why did you throw away your cigar? You know I like smoke."

"Perhaps, because I wish your undivided attention."

"Well, then, what is this urgent business?

"Ridgeway! where did you come from?"

Tell me, please, as quickly as you can, for I am going to ride."

"Will Mr. Huger—"

"Yes."

"I thought as—"

Laughing, she threw her head back, and said:

"This is a new role for you to appear in—that of a jealous lover. You know Gerald is as old a friend as—"

"Friend!" he exclaimed. "I grant that; but I have the right to a more endearing title. Have you forgotten it? I have thought lately you had."

"She is the business to be settled at once," she said, with flashing eyes.

"I think," he answered, in a calm, even tone, "it is best for us to understand each other, so as to avoid any unpleasantness in the future."

"If you mean," said she, "you would like to break the silly engagement our fathers entangled us in, I am quite ready to do so, for I have seen for some time your heart was in Virginia."

"And yours, Claire, where is it?"

"You must continue to guess. Our urgent business will soon be over. As you have long since broken the engagement in spirit—"

"Say 'we,'" he interrupted. Not heeding, she continued—

"I see no reason why you should be bound by a mere form, so, from this moment, you are free, and I think if your father were alive he would agree with me—where no heart is, there should be no engagement." Saying this, she left the room.

"Proud as Lucifer!" he muttered, "and late for happiness.

He had already heard that Elizabeth is to marry Doctor Ochiltree.

Claire and Hampton were now warm friends. She would say: "It is so delightful to be on these terms. Nothing is expected of me, and I can be natural with you. When we were engaged I had to pretend I loved you and it was so tiresome."

"Complimentary, I must say."

"Well, you know, Guardian, as much as I like you, it is different from love."

"Since you have learned how to define it," he would answer laughing.

It was more than three months after the talk in the library before Claire's engagement to Gerald was announced, and Hampton truly rejoiced in their happiness. The wedding, which took place in the late autumn, was a quiet one, as Gerald had recently lost a sister. A few weeks after they went on their bridal trip to Florida, and Hampton, who was much broken in health, was persuaded to accompany them, for our happiness will gain for me the 'blues,' but I will efface myself as much as possible," he said, when he yielded to their entreaties.

* * * * * * *

"St. Augustine! This fascinating old town! I have to pinch myself to realize I am here, a few day after leaving my arrival. They were walking by the old "Sea-wall." The sky was of that lovely opaline blue, and the atmosphere balmy and caressing. They entered shops, rudely built of wood, almost close to the wall, where alligators' teeth, shells, and corals could be bought.

"Let us buy a tooth for good luck," said Claire.

So three charms were purchased and attached to their watch chains.

Then they continued their walk: this time on the wall.

"How many lovers have walked along here, I wonder?" said Hampton. "Not many that were playing second fiddle, as I am now doing."

"Now, if you are going to be low-spirited," said Claire, "I will push you off. Accept your blessings and do not think of your disappointments."

"Are you one of the blessings to be accepted?" he asked.

"Of course. You are allowed to bask in the sunshine of my happiness. Is that not enough to cheer you up?"

"If it does not scorch me. I think the sun will, at any rate. Suppose we turn into that shady street."

From St. George street they went to the City Garay. Children were playing about, dodging in and out the sentry-boxes.

"What very picturesque ruins!" exclaimed Gerald.

"How securely they must have slept in those good old days when the 'Barrier Gate' was locked at midnight," said Claire.

"At sunset, you mean," said Hampton.

"My wise guardian, a wide margin is allowed in talking of the past. There may be a doubt about some things, but there can be none, I suppose, about the antiquity of these towers."

"No; next to the Fort, they are the chief memorials of the old St. Augustine."

"Why did we never come to this charming place before?" said she. "I believe I could have fallen in love with even you, Hampton, under such a sky, and breathing this"—taking a whiff—"delicious atmosphere."

"Thanks, I am quite flattered; or should be, rather. Perhaps it might not have depended so completely on the sky," he answered, in an amused tone.

"Why, Guardian, you must have been ungallant and told me so; and I had a right to your—what shall I call it—love?"

"Call it gone, by that name to the unfaithless," he replied.

"Now, if we go before you begin to quarrel," said Gerald, who did not enjoy the tone of the conversation.

"We are only talking of a 'might have been,'" said Claire. "The sky and sea have charms at one time"—with an arch look at Hampton—"alas! the awakening!"

"For which I devoutly thanks," said Gerald.

"Should," replied Claire; "do, you mean. I declare, you are getting positively 'settled,' and I, for one, do not like the change. You see, Hampton, what propinquity has done! Take warning and remain a bachelor."

One morning about a week after this conversation Hampton strolled off to look for the fabled "Fountain of Youth," as he heard it was near the town; but he changed his mind, and went to the old Fort. As he sat in one of the watch towers looking seaward, and enjoying the view, he saw coming two gentlemen and a lady. As they came near, to his great surprise, he recognized Elizabeth and Doctor Ochiltree.

"On their bridal tour," he muttered. "Strange, there should be three in that party, too."

Very much agitated, and thinking they would pass by, he kept quiet; but Elizabeth separated herself from the party, saying:

"I am going up those steps to look out; they say the view is beautiful from that tower."

Fate was beckoning her on. She came very near failing backward when she saw her old patient holding out his hand, exclaiming:

"My nurse! Who would have thought I should meet you here!"

Doctor Ochiltree, hearing her exclamation of surprise, had run up the steps to see what was the matter.

"Ridgeway! Where did you come from? I am delighted to see you, old friend! Come down and let me introduce you to Mr. Marshall."

The latter was curious to know what had happened.

He greeted Major Ridgeway warmly, telling him his name had been a household word ever since the doctor came from Virginia.

"He seems to have met no one but my niece, my sister, and yourself," he said.

"Why have we not met you before?" said Doctor Ochiltree. "It is such a small place. Have you been here long?"

"About ten days," he replied.

"That explains it," said the Doctor. "We have been aboard a week and only returned yesterday evening."

After a little chat Mr. Marshall expressed a wish to go back to the hotel, as he was much fatigued.

"I will not ask Elizabeth to shorten her walk," he said, "but I will be obliged to have the Doctor's arm."

"I shall be very glad to escort your niece to the hotel, and if she will allow me to accompany her in her walk it will be a double pleasure," said Hampton, eagerly, but somewhat stiffly.

"You will, no doubt, find much to say to each other," said the Doctor, as he turned to go back.

But after they had gone, Elizabeth said nothing for several minutes. She was too much surprised. She had wished for him so often, and here he was! It seemed like magic. He had been prepared for the meeting, but she was not, and her wishes were unheeded, before that. Now, he was exercised to know if she was single, for the first question he asked was:

"How have you been married?"

"Married!" she repeated. "What do you mean?"

Rumor had you engaged to Doctor Ochiltree, and seeing you all together, I thought it quite natural."

"You are mistaken. I am here with my uncle for his health."

"Is he physician. Now, be kind enough to answer some questions for me. Why did you come?"

"Also for my health."

"Name?"

"No; with Claire and a Mr. Huger, who is related to her."

He could not tell her yet of Claire's marriage, as he wished to find out if she loved him.

"Do you think she will like me?" she asked.

"I am sure she will."

"And, after all, you married her!" she said, reproachfully.

"All what?"

"Your protestations."

"You must love her for my sake, Elizabeth."

"You forget yourself, Major Ridgeway. I am Miss Burwell. I think I would better go back now; it always frets my uncle for me to be away from him long."

"Let me show you the old Chapel, first."

"I have been there several times."

"But not with me," pleaded he; "come, do, for the sake of old times."

She thought to herself, "this once," and went with him. Sitting down on a rough seat, he said:

"Miss Burwell, I am sorry if I have offended you. I thought our former intimacy would excuse the liberty I took."

"It was very different then. Now, you are a married man; you must be more particular."

"A married man! Do you really think I am married?"

"You said so."

"You misunderstood me. Claire is married to her cousin, Gerald Huger, and I am only a third party. What! Crying?"

"You are mean!" sobbed Elizabeth, "to make me believe you were married!"

"And, darling, do you care?" said he, putting his arm around her. "How we long for happiness and when it is almost in our grasp it eludes us! Broken in health, I dare not ask you to marry me; yet, I love you a great deal more, my sweet little nurse, than I did in those hospital days."

"And I," she whispered, "have always loved you. 'Broken in health,' you may be, but you are more to me than all the world beside; and I—don't look at me—will have no other husband."

A half hour later they came out of the chapel looking radiant. Claire had been told of the meeting and of what had occurred. Her first words to Hampton were:

"I told you so; but I am so glad!"

She went at once to see Elizabeth, and had a long talk. They took a great fancy to each other. Gerald said:

"That is all that was wanting to complete our happiness. Roy Hampton will make a splendid husband. He has been on my mind ever since I was married."

"Why, dear?" Claire asked, the picture of innocence.

"My conscience has hurt me for taking you from him. Now we can be happy without alloy."

Mr. Marshall gave his consent, though the dearest wish of his heart had been to see his niece married to his friend, Doctor Ochiltree. The latter had asked and been refused; but so kindly, she had retained him as a friend, who rejoiced with her. Now, truly, St. Augustine was a fairy-land.

Such walks and drives they had! The beautiful deer that went to Anastasia Island and after mounting the top of the lighthouse and running down like children, then wandered to the seashore, where were huge masses of exquisite covered with seaweed.

"It looks" said Claire, "as if the mermaids were combing their hair, and have brought Guardy good luck, after all," she continued. "Just watch them playing in the sand like children!"

"The first stages are very idiotic," responded Gerald, laughing.

When the time came for the party to break up Hampton went with Mr. Marshall and Elizabeth to New York, where he remained until the first of May. Mr. Marshall became very fond of him, and promised to spend his winters at Ridgeway Court.

In these confidential talks, he told of his early days, when he had looked forward to accomplishing so much in the world; and later in life, when all his aspirations were killed where Claire died. Now, in his old age, just waiting for the end to come.

Elizabeth will inherit all I possess," he said, "and I advise you to keep this house. It is commodious and pleasant; but that must be as it pleases you both. It may be only an old man's fancy, believing it superior to a modern establishment.

"I hope you may occupy it for many years yet," said Hampton, affectionately.

It is impossible to describe Mammy's delight. She was to go South as Elizabeth's maid. Two months in every year were to be spent in Winchester, and "Mairlyn" and Her husband should continue to take care of the Cottage."

The last day of June they were married in the church her uncle had attended for many years. It was thought best, as he could not stand the excitement of a house wedding. The morning after the ceremony a large party left for Saratoga. Mr. Marshall, Mrs. Ridgeway, Claire, Gerald, Doctor Ochiltree, Beatrice (a sister of Gerald), Frances Carter (an intimate friend of Elizabeth), and last, but by no means least, Mammy Peggy.

The summer was spent in traveling from one place to another and early in October Hampton took Elizabeth to Winchester. Dear old Winchester! Her heart was full akin to overflowing as she approached her home. She had traveled far and had seen much of the world since she last saw it; but no place could compare, in her estimation, with Virginia.

As the train passed through Harper's Ferry, she thought with pride of Thomas Jefferson's remark, "It was worth a trip across the Atlantic Ocean to see the place." An ineffable smile of contentment was on her face as she viewed, drawing nearer the town, the hazy line in the distance, saying:

"Oh, how I did long for a glimpse of the Blue Ridge when I lived in Lower Virginia!"

Loving hands had been busy at the Cottage. All over the house were beautiful bridal gifts. The little harbor was a perfect bower of beauty. Bunches of golden rod were in large Saturna jars. Chrysanthemums of every shade were placed about, and lycopus, ferns, and geraniums lined the small hall. In the dining room was set a long table, with refreshments, as about fifty guests were there to welcome her to her old home. It was a great surprise to her. She knew presents awaited her, a few, but this demonstration of affection was entirely unexpected.

She was touched on looking over her presents to find one from Mr. Page—a lovely brooch; one large pearl surrounded by forget-me-nots, in turquoise, with leaves of green enamel. From Mrs. Flournoy came a quaint diamond ring she had once admired; and a present from each of the children. One room was locked until most of the guests had gone; then Elizabeth and Hampton were taken to it.

Over the mantel was a large oil painting, beautifully executed, entitled, "A Night on a Battlefield." Mammy had directed Malviny where to find an old ambrotype taken of Elizabeth about that time, and the shawl worn that night. The likeness was pronounced perfect. That room, from floor to two of her father's friends. Hampton was delighted.

"It ought to be called, 'The Beginning of the End,'" he said, stealing a kiss from Elizabeth, who had lingered behind.

One beautiful moonlit night he took her to the battlefield. How changed it was! A wooden shanty had been built near the place she sat that night, and vines were running all over the ground. But the moon looked calmly down upon their happiness, as calmly as it had done upon the poor soldier's misery.

"About here," she said ,"lay that poor man who tried so hard to tell me nothing would hurt me. I think I never was pitied him afterward, until too late!"

"Well, my darling, I forgive him, as he drew her to him, "let us hope it soothed his last moments to gaze on such a brave Confederate girl."

(The end.)

HOW I FOUND MY WIFE.

BY PETER QUINCE.

"Well, Walter, and you are married?"

"Yes," I answered, "and to the sweetest little woman in the world."

"Of course you think so," said my friend; "but I cannot understand how one who was such a confirmed cynic as yourself could be so completely transformed in the course of a few months."

And so, with my feet on the old desk, and myself comfy enough in one of the huge armchairs with which every lawyer's office is supplied, I told my friend, my old friend, Harvey Burt, how I found my wife.

"You know, Harvey, that I was, as you say, a confirmed cynic, sneering at all women-kind, looking at it with that view, it is true, but only to kill time, or for a little amusement. Beyond that I cared not a pin on I did not care a fig for Long Branch or Saratoga. I had been to Newport and the Springs, as you say, for the last seven years horribly; and so I began to look about for some quiet place where I could spend a month's fishing and shooting. The village of ——— Hampton, in Connecticut, and I went at once, rejoiced to think that I might have quiet evenings, where I could escape match-making mothers and their daughters, no extra toilets for a dinner, but a quiet home, and—fishing and shooting.

"Now, you know, is on Long Island Sound, and I rejoiced at the prospect of boating and bathing, without the nuisances which infest a fashionable watering place. But as the lumbering old stage drove up to the door of the Akerman House, the only hotel in the village, I began to realize that my dream of peace was dispelled. Young women! Ugh! I daresay—but such young women! I assure you that I was eyed and commented on for half an hour by a dozen or four amiable damsels, who were on the lookout for 'something new.' I went to my room, and after my supper—I went there early to avoid the rush—I went to bed, and had the honor of an introduction to the landlord's family at table. One attracted more than a passing notice, a Miss Hall, who was the proudest thing you ever saw, with Miss Hall, after the most approved fashion. Such a girl, Harvey! You never saw the mate of her!"

"Was she your divinity?"

"Don't interrupt me. No, she was not; but she was the most self-satisfied young woman I ever met. Handsome, good looking, gifted with a tongue, and a certain knowledge of the world, which, as in what Thackeray says of Becky Sharpe, 'That any woman with a knowledge of herself and a little knowledge of other men's existence, may marry whom she likes.' Miss Hall was the belle of the place, and a long story short— I flirted all the time, and until we found the end of the house. But I began to tire of the game, and to wish for something new.

"One night, as I rowed Miss Hall to the village, we met a party of three coming up the river. We were in a skiff, and as a gentleman—one was an invalid. Harvey, for the life of me I cannot get that woman's haunted me. There's no use to describe it. It wouldn't bear it; but I thought it the sweetest face I had ever seen. I was more than a week before I saw it again, though I had passed the house every day meanwhile.

"One night, as I came in from a bath, on entering the hall, I heard a pair of little feet in red slippers. Laugh if you will, you rascal, but those slippers, or rather their contents, finished me. I advanced and I saw the same face—the invalid was at last able to walk down—and I was introduced to Miss Ella Benton. Of course I dropped Miss Hall like a hot potato—a scandal, she thought to win an easy victory with the newcomer, but in a novel way in which she repelled my attentions put me at my wits' ends, and I made a mental vow to drop him—I mean Miss Benton—at once. Hence to that conclusion it would be difficult to explain. I tried desperately. I felt myself falling in love, and suppose that I showed it. I proposed to her. My advance was quickly refused. Nothing daunted, I determined on a change of base. I asked her to accept me as her friend—and only that, for life—a true friend. I got that foothold, and then tried to render myself indispensable, trusting to kindness and little attentions to put me in favor.

"I saved her life, Harvey, taking a cold bath, and spoiling a suit of clothes in her behalf, and got coldly thanked in return. Then I tried the letting-alone process, and that was the most complete failure of all. I announced my departure. She was sorry, valued me as a friend and all that sort of thing, but nothing more. Pique was mingled with despair in my mind; I did not want to give her up. I had said I was going, and I must go. I proposed again, and got 'no' for an answer. I vowed that I would set out at once for Alaska. She told me that it really did not concern her in the least. I got angry and left N——. But I could not drive her face out of my memory.

"Three weeks ago while on a trip to Montreal, I stopped all night at Rutland, and the first name on the register—at least the first that I saw—was Ella Benton. I sent up my card, but she would not receive me. I came down in the morning, and turning to the clerk's desk put my hand in my pocket for my wallet. It was not there. I searched my clothes—no wallet. I went back to my room—no wallet. I was a stranger in the place without money. The clerk openly expressed his belief that I was fraud. Quite a crowd gathered around me as I endeavored to explain the matter. Just at ...5 moment a lady passed through the r... and bowed to me, though very distantly. It was Miss Benton.

In a few moments she sent for me. I went up, wonderingly, and as I entered she arose, and said:

"Mr. Hunt, I heard, accidentally of your misfortune. Will you oblige me by using this check, which you can replace at your convenience."

I tried to stammer out a refusal, but she would not hear to it.

"Well, said I, 'Miss Benton, I will accept your kindness; but I have no security to offer unless—unless it is myself.'

"When I will cried cheerfully" said the little woman.

"Do you really mean it?' said I, hardly knowing whether I was asleep or awake.

"Why, yes," she said, "I am very strict about money matters, and as you have no other security I suppose I must take you. Is it a bargain?"

"Why, you know my answer, of course, old fellow, and we were married then and there. But I say, Harvey, there's one thing I've forgotten entirely. I never have returned that check to my wife."

Lucky.

Bobby, who has lived most of his short life in the country and who has not attended a place of worship very often, is taken to church next Sunday by his aunt. Shortly before the service the contribution is taken up, and the little boy, who is naturally observant and deeply interested in the proceeding. After the basket has passed by times richer.

the pew in which he is seated, Bobby, holding in his fat little hand a coin which he shows triumphantly, leans over toward his companion and whispers in a perfectly audible voice: "How much did you get, Auntie? I got five cents."

Sure.

Miss Millions—Ah! Do you really love me?

Lord Getthotcyune—I could not love you any, dontcherknow, if you were twenty times richer.

YOUR MONEY BACK
IF NOT SATISFIED.

DO YOU SUPPOSE that a company with a capital of $500,000.00, paid in full, and the proud reputation of 37 years of continued success, would make such an offer unless it could carry it out to the letter?

DO YOU SUPPOSE we would jeopardize our standing with the public and our chances of still greater success by failing to fulfil any promise we make?

DO YOU SUPPOSE we would make such an offer if we did not have the utmost confidence in the satisfying quality of our goods?

WE KNOW we can please you and save you money, for HAYNER WHISKEY goes direct from our distillery to you, with all its original richness and flavor, carrying a UNITED STATES REGISTERED DISTILLERY GUARANTEE OF PURITY and AGE, and saving you the big profits of the dealers. That's why it's best for medicinal purposes. That's why it's preferred for other uses. That's why we are regularly supplying nearly half a million satisfied customers. That's why YOU should try it. Your money back if you're not satisfied. How could any offer be fairer?

Direct from our Distillery to YOU

SAVES DEALERS' PROFITS---PREVENTS ADULTERATION.

HAYNER WHISKEY

Pure Seven-Year-Old Rye

4 FULL QUARTS $3.20

Express Charges Paid by Us.

OUR OFFER We will send you FOUR FULL QUART BOTTLES OF HAYNER'S SEVEN-YEAR-OLD RYE FOR $3.20 and we will pay the express charges. When you receive the whiskey, try it and if you don't find it all right and as good as you ever used or can buy from anybody else at any price, then send it back at our expense and your $3.20 will be returned to you by mail. How could an offer be fairer? We take all the risk and stand all the expense, if the goods do not please you. Won't you let us send you a trial order? We ship in a plain sealed case; no marks to show what's inside. If you don't want 4 quarts yourself, join with a friend.

Orders for Arizona, California, Colorado, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, New Mexico, Oregon, Utah, Washington or Wyoming must be on the basis of 4 QUARTS for $4.00 by EXPRESS PREPAID, or 50 QUARTS for $48.00 by FREIGHT PREPAID.

WRITE OUR NEAREST OFFICE AND DO IT NOW.

ESTABLISHED 1856. DISTILLERY, TROY, O.

THE HAYNER DISTILLING COMPANY,

St. Louis, Mo. Dayton, Ohio. St. Paul, Minn. Atlanta, Ga.

THE CHICAGO LEDGER
30 YEARS OLD.
Published Every Saturday
—BY—
W. D. BOYCE CO.,

All communications should be addressed to
THE CHICAGO LEDGER,
112, 114 DEARBORN ST.,
CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES.
Single subscriptions to the Chicago Ledger by mail $1.00 a year, 50 cents for six months, in advance. If not paid in advance, $1.00 a year, $1.50 for six months. Remittances should be made by Money Order, Registered Letter, Express Order or Bank Draft, payable to the Chicago Ledger. One dollar should be added to all foreign and Canada subscriptions to pay postage.

Entered at the post office at Chicago, Illinois, as second-class matter.

THE CHICAGO LEDGER
SATURDAY BLADE
AND BOYCE'S WEEKLY

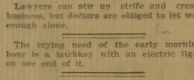
ADVERTISING.
Advertising rate $1.00 per Agate Line, per Insertion, for advertisements in the Chicago Ledger, Saturday Blade and Boyce's Weekly combined.

750,000
COPIES WEEKLY
PROVED CIRCULATION.

BACK NUMBERS.
Back numbers of the Ledger can be had by addressing this office. Always give the paper's name desired, plainly written, accompanied by your full address, and your order will receive prompt attention. Price 5 cents per copy.

BEWARE OF STRANGERS.
The Ledger employs no traveling agents to solicit subscriptions, but every person working in that capacity is a fraud. No person is authorized to take subscriptions for the Ledger unless he or she be well known in the city or village where they have been appointed agents to act for the Ledger, and have a card of authority to that effect. Subscribers will confer a favor by reporting such persons as are now traveling from town to town in different sections of the country, claiming to be agents of the Ledger and thereby defrauding the people. Beware of strangers.

UNION LABEL



The corn crop needs an outfit of fleece-lined underwear.

It is safer to twist a lion's tail than to call a woman's attention to her first gray hair.

Indiana is quite certain that President Roosevelt knows a good governor when he sees one.

Owing to the high price of land the dealers in it commodity are living on the fat of the land.

Lawyers can stir up strife and create business, but doctors are obliged to let well enough alone.

The crying need of the early morning hour is a latchkey with an electric light on one end of it.

Don't be surprised to find yourself on your uppers if you sit around waiting for a dead man's shoes.

Mr. Schwab may have thought it would attract less attention if he retired just as the new Pope came in.

Husbands should be frank and tell their wives everything—and wives should be generous and believe it.

It's all right for the moon to get full occasionally, but it's all wrong for men to think they are in the moon class.

The chewing gum trust has a surplus, after paying dividends of $78,000. The news has set a great many other jaws wagging.

In France a woman went into a trance when she heard the police were coming after her. It does not affect the heads of the Postoffice Department that way.

As long as the crops are bountiful and the factories are behind in their orders we may smile pleasantly at the crumbling of the paper fortunes in Wall Street.

England does not like the South Dakota divorce, but it raises no objection to the New York marriage where some broken-down titled personage gets the best of the bargain.

A sixty-horsepower engine used on Western ranches will plow sixty acres a day. Between that great machine and the automobile people who like horse meat should be able to get it at bargain rates.

THE HAND OF FATE;

OR, THE MYSTERY OF THE CLARINET CLUB.

By Constance Beatrice Willard.

(Copyright by W. D. Boyce Co.)

Begun in No. 28, July 18. Subscriptions can begin with that issue, or back copies can be procured from news stands, or our agents, or by mail from office of publication.

CHAPTER XXII.

All the lower boxes at one of the leading theaters were filled with the guests of Mrs. Tanquer, a few nights after Winchesham's resignation from his club, the event being a party given in honor of her brother's engagement. Glasses were raised at the gay party, from all over the house, and many comments were passed upon the beautiful women, and well-dressed, well-groomed men. In the most prominent position was Miss Stoneborough, who no one imagined would be capable of fancy and a low-cut bodice smiling and thoroughly happy, although it was a little damper on her spirits that the engagement of Forest and society prevented as open a display of affection on her part toward her fiance as she would have liked. Could they have gone to the theater alone they would have sat away in the gallery, eaten candy, and held each other's hands, she would have enjoyed herself infinitely more; but before a whole houseful of people, who made her nervous and excited, she felt that it looked much more frequently that was well-bred for an engaged girl to appear as a young lady with careless courteousness. Every muscle of his young face was under perfect control, although he managed to whisper to his sister, while stooping for her fan:

"For God's sake, Ada, try not to stop that laugh if you can. That is getting on my nerves terribly."

Mrs. Tanquer did her best, but with poor success. Poor Ada Winchesham could not appear but to a disadvantage beside her future sister-in-law, who sat with such quiet dignity, her white arms bare against her pale blue chiffons with the aristocratic grace of a princess. Her likeness was very strong that night between her and her brother and many remarked it.

Ada felt terribly upset at first, when she discovered that Winchesham was not to be of the party, that he had declined on account of pressing business, but managed to pass the time away, unconsciously flirting with one of her former admirers, dainty, alluring and charming in pale lavender satin, profusely trimmed with bunches of real Parma violets. Several other ladies rounded out the feminine portion of the party, and added to the attractiveness of the scene with their beauty and exquisite toilets, for it was noticed that with the exception of Miss Stoneborough, Mrs. Tanquer had never introduced to society any but beautiful and well-dressed girls.

Possibly, however, Ada was the only one who really enjoyed herself. Ada and Mrs. Tanquer who made himself universally agreeable, while all the time keeping a tender watch over his wife's comfort. Now each one had matters pressing down upon him, however light the conversation and gay the laughter.

Forest played the attentive gallant to his almost hated future sister, and longed for a sight of Lilly's glorious eyes; a touch of their warm, firm hand, a kiss from sweet mouth. The heroine of the play reminded him of her, but in no other way—nothing did. As for his sister, what was she thinking of as she sat there, watching Forest's face more than the stage? Down in the pit was a man watching both, who never let a single movement escape him, for his life had been spent in this work. In the rear of the play Mr. Winchesham, looking at the party through a powerful glass, a fact which might have startled Ada had she known it.

Even the longest plays come to an end after a time, although Forest Tanquer seemed that an endless repetition was going on, never to cease. Winchesham did his position become, raised up before so many people, pointed out as a man who had delivered himself over into the hands of an uncouth woman, simply because she had more money than any other he knew. If it was so hard to go through these social functions, how would he manage to endure a life of such misery? Well, there was some comfort in his doctor's report that he would never live to see his thirtieth birthday. But Lilly!

All these hopeless thoughts were buried too deep in his heart for any one, even his sister, to guess him of them, as he carefully folded her opera cloak about Miss Stoneborough, and escorted her to his sister's carriage, which was to convey the lovers and Mr. and Mrs. Tanquer to the Tanquer residence, where a dainty supper was to follow the theater. To the surprise of the brother and sister, as soon as they were in the carriage, Miss Stoneborough began talking to Mr. Tanquer relative to some investments and displayed a business knowledge of the entire matter, being able to instruct even that master of finance. All of her nervous gaucherie vanished, and she showed herself, the well-balanced business woman, as thoroughly conversant with the affairs of her numerous holdings as the astute financier himself.

"Not once during the ride did her unpleasant, rasping laugh jar upon Forest's nerves, but as she entered the house it began again, and he had to take a firm grasp of himself to keep from allowing it to appear in his face.

No one understood more thoroughly than Mrs. Tanquer the art of giving just such little suppers, and she played her part of hostess admirably, while Mr. Tanquer was perfect as a genial host, bent upon having all happy. While matters were moving along so smoothly, Miss Stoneborough suddenly raising her voice, asked of the company in general:

"Do you like plays like the one we saw tonight?"

No one answered for a moment, then Mrs. Tanquer replied:

"The morals of all our modern plays are too much on the French order to suit me."

"Oh, but do you think it was a bit natural?" continued Miss Stoneborough, upsetting her wine glass in her earnestness.

"None of them are," suggested one of the gentlemen.

"Take that woman in love. She can't see that the man doesn't care for her, when it is as plain as the nose on one's face, and then she risks her life to win him. If he don't care for her she ought to have seen it, and if he didn't then after all she did for him, she ought to have thrown him over and taken up with one who would."

A frightfully painful silence followed, in which all but the unconscious Elizabeth were wildly searching for something to say. All but Elizabeth and Forest, for the latter calmly looked about the table, as though he had not heard the words. It was finally Ada who came to the rescue.

"Oh, I like to hear love stories, don't you? They always work in love to all the plays, for it always comes in our lives, and we must have some one to love, you know," speaker and asked, kindly:

"Where's your young man?"

And, in the confusion, without thinking how much she was confessing to, Ada replied:

"Mr. Wickersham was detained by business."

"No, my dear, not business, but temper," Mr. Tanquer said, indulgently, nodding at Ada, who was a special pet of his. "The other night I had to reprove him a little at the club, and he left in a rage. Still, he's a good fellow and a day or two will bring him about all right."

"I think you were a little savage," broke in Melbourne, with his hand before his mouth to hide that old nervous contraction which was now very noticeable.

"I? I hope not. I did not mean to be so. None of us can stand this constant bickering."

"No; but then there is always the chance that Weldon is not guilty after all, and if he is innocent, Wickersham is in the right."

"He can never be in the right, my boy, in disturbing the harmony of the club and intruding private and unwelcome opinions upon others."

"The murder case comes up wherever one goes," cried Miss Stoneborough. "Out West a man or two more or less didn't make much difference. One night, I remember, four fellows were shot down in their tracks for disagreeing about the kind of drinks best suited to the climate."

"My dear," forgot one's uselessness," suggested Mrs. Tanquer.

The voice was very gentle, but Elizabeth felt the reproof, and for a moment she longed to run away from these people whom she knew were laughing at her, and perhaps she might have done so, had not Forest, coming to her aid, said, gayly:

"Don't, Maura, darling. One of the most attractive things about my future wife is her perfect fearlessness and frankness of speech. We are all too conventional. Let us learn from her bravery to call a spade a spade, and not mince our words. We have only a short time and talk to us this unhappy affair. What is done is done, and probably all concerned would give much to put the clock back a few months, but as time will no doubt heal the wounds in the midst again, would it not be better taste to keep from referring to details we are all too well conversant with, and making our conversation savor of a justice court room? Please accept the subject, Ada, and come to ask you to drink to my future happiness," and raising his glass as he did so.

Even his sister did not know what this speech cost him, but a kinder feeling crept into his face for the moment, and he saw her look of gratitude, and even the laugh did not grate upon him so much during the remainder of the evening.

CHAPTER XXIII.

As Lilly passed through the door of her new home, a thrill of horror seized her and she shuddered in the chill, cold, damp wave of air which blew in her face. Endeavoring to conquer herself, she entered, but upon looking about the darkened room, she threw herself down on the floor, and began to sob as though her heart would break, being joined by the baby, who, too, was frightened.

"With the baby held in her arms, Mrs. Sinclair bent over the prostrate girl and began to tenderly remonstrate:

"Lilly, Lilly, this is not brave. Come, dear, try to control yourself."

SPECIAL TO OUR READERS

Have you seen BOYCE'S WEEKLY? It is issued every Wednesday and published in the interests of all who work for a living.

BOYCE'S WEEKLY sells for 5 cents a copy. It contains news from the labor centers all over the world, and has on its staff of editors the leading thinkers and writers in the world of work, among them Willis J. Abbot, Henry Demarest Lloyd, James Duncan, Henry George Jr., John Mitchell, Carroll D. Wright, E. E. Clark and Judson Grenell.

BOYCE'S WEEKLY is a big 7-column newspaper, illustrated in colors. It is sold by newsboys or agents who sell the SATURDAY BLADE and CHICAGO LEDGER. If your boy does not handle BOYCE'S WEEKLY ask him for it, and in the meantime write us for a sample copy, which we will send you free.

BOYCE'S WEEKLY tells all the news of the world pertaining to labor, and has many special features and interesting departments. It is a grand paper both for employer and employe. Every one should read it.

Every person is interested in the welfare of those who work for a living, and by united effort great results can be accomplished. For 5 cents each week you can get both sides of the labor question, and the biggest amount of reading you ever saw for a nickel.

Be sure and ask your agent for a copy of BOYCE'S WEEKLY, and if he does not handle it tell him you want a copy next week, and have him order a supply.

"This is a horrible house, Mary, horrible. I think it is haunted."

"Oh, nonsense! A girl of your sense talking like this. Just wait until we get it fixed up and you'll see how really cosy we can have it. The front room upstairs is very nice, and you are to have it all to yourself. See, you are to have the pick of the house," cheerfully. "Lilly, dear, you must not cry this way or you will make yourself ill. Dick, Dick, where are you? Come in here a moment."

Naughty as the Sinclair children might be, a request from their mother always met with instant response, so that as Dick was not on hand, Johnnie put his dirty face inside the door, and asked:

"What is it?"

So accustomed was Mrs. Sinclair to this substitution, and having early called Dick because his name first occurred to her mind, that she did not notice the difference, but dispatched Johnnie to the nearest restaurant for a pot of tea and two cups. Knowing of old that the children were capable of attending to themselves, she gave them a little money, with instructions to provide sufficient provisions for themselves, and then poured a cup of tea for herself and Lilly, which she supplemented by the sandwiches from a basket. After she had drunk a cup of hot tea, Lilly, whose natural disposition was a very cheerful one, began to look on a less dark side of matters, and was very willing to follow her mother in a survey of the house, which was possible, as the storm had cleared away and the sun was setting in a blaze of glory. Lilly being called to assist in trying to open all the shutters, which in this old house were in the inside, and with the gorgeous light from the west brightening everything, it appeared much more habitable, and less like the dingy dungeon of an hour before.

Room by room they made a round of the house, and Lilly could not help being touched by the pains her sister evidently took for comfort; this, the sister whose love was never stronger than in these days of her grief. The house was a large one, three stories high, with a basement, so there would be plenty of room for the family, and in which the scanty amount of furniture would be lost, but this did not disturb Mrs. Sinclair.

"We will have plenty of room for once, Really, Lilly, I do not know what ever happened before, did it?"

"No; there has always been a sad lack of it," replied Lilly, laughing in spite of herself.

The two ladies were standing in the kitchen, one of the largest rooms in the house, from which already led to the basement.

"As I usually have a couple of children about my feet, I am glad to have for once in my life a large kitchen," Mrs. Sinclair continued; "but we are going to have a time with the floor, Lilly."

"So we are," Lilly replied, turning from the window, from which she had been looking, and wondering where Forest was and if she ever came into his thoughts, not knowing that as that very moment he was writing to banish her lovely face from his memory and be content with the substantial Elizabeth.

"What do you suppose made the painters so careless of their work, Sinclair, looking at the floor."

The paint is spilled down the steps, too," Lilly said, opening the door, and peering down into the gloom at unsightly blotches of red paint, which were also scattered all over the floor of the kitchen.

"Looks new, too," Mrs. Sinclair declared. "But probably it is an excuse for fixing up the floor, which will please all when we get things fixed, won't we?"

Lilly was not resentful for she was becoming interested in the thought of arranging their new home, and was certainly endeavoring to forget her unhappiness. From the kitchen the two returned to other portions of the house, making plans and arranging away the time, which would have otherwise been heavily on their hands, while waiting for the furniture to arrive, for, although the wagons had left two hours before them, no trace had yet appeared. Still, nothing was an experience they were well accustomed to, and there were no incidents connected with it to which they were not familiar. The children were well seasoned, also, but their active spirits needed some outlet, and after they had seen everything purchased or borrowed, and well roused up the neighbors by shouting commands to each other in voices calculated to pierce the thickest drum, Mrs. Sinclair and Lilly found them entertaining that Nancy and Rennie had fallen into the well, and run to the rescue.

When they reached the little court in the rear of the building, some of the elevated tracks, they found that with the good fortune which seemed to attend the children, no serious hurt had been sustained. Upon questioning, it was ascertained that Teddy and Rennie had come into the yard to see him to swim, and then dared Nancy to jump in after him. Of course, no girl of Nancy's spirit was going to take a dare, so she plunged in after the little brother. However, as the well consisted simply of a barrel sunk into the ground to catch the drippings from the eaves, they were easily rescued, and being Sinclair children, the wetting injured neither clothing nor persons. Scarcely had this been satisfactorily effected, when the furniture arrived, and for several hours the children were almost delirious with joy, being like little stokers, helping and hindering, but doing it all with such hearty good will that the movers actually had to be angry when they discovered that the harness had been so changed about that when they drove off the horses went their own way and left the wagon at a standstill in the middle of the street.

CHAPTER XXIV.

The bell in the private office of Henry Wickersham rung sharply, and an uniformed boy hurried to answer it. Every one moved rapidly about the premises of Wickersham & Son, for the controlling power there dwelt in the person of the son, who, while a firm and generous employer, would not tolerate any neglect.

When the boy opened the door he saw the young man sitting at his desk, brisk and alert as ever, although had he known it, Wickersham had not closed his eyes all night long.

"Bring me my mail."

"Yes, sir," and, having already known what was wanted, according to custom, the boy had laid out the readiness, so that but a moment was consumed in placing the large pile of letters before his employer.

"There's a man here with something else for you."

"Let him come right in."

A very quiet man, but with a certain resolute force about him, came in, touched his hat, but said nothing, and placed upon Wickersham's desk a leather bag, which doubly padlocked. Saying nothing on his part, Wickersham took a key from his pocket, opened a private drawer in his desk, and took from it two keys with which he unfastened the money and lifted from it a bundle of papers, relocking the portfolio and dismissing the man with a nod of the head. When the latter had left the room, the young broker rose from his chair, locked the door, and began to look through the papers so quietly brought to him.

Of their contents they were many, he studied them carefully, a frown deepening on his face as he did so. Then he finished, he pushed them back and sat looking at them for some moments.

"Strange. Not a single tangible clew, and yet we are using a fine comb on this city."

Then he leaned back in his chair, carefully added these papers to many similar in his private portfolio, and, as he closed it came over his face as he looked at them, that look of pain and misery which was continually seeking to turn the whole world black for him.

"Those must be destroyed when the case is over," he thought. "They are too damning for many people to have a hand in. Have heard it said that every man has secret sorrow which he would hide from away from the world. To judge from these documents there are principally active in this city."

Then he leaned back still on his face, Wickersham returned to his correspondence looking over his letters. Evidently he was pleased here, either for from one end of the pile to the other he could find no trace of a perfumed mauve envelope, with the monogram "A. C." in one corner. Those he had carefully pursued his mail, marking the letters as to that the correspondence could be handled by his secretary. Henry Wickersham had some ideas about business, which he would not relax. Believing that it was absolutely necessary for him to surround himself with capable help, he had established a system, by means of which it was possible to work from hell by to positions of trust, and, therefore, any man who filled them. His secretary was a man of great intelligence and carefully selected, who had his staff of stenographers under him. Wickersham never went into details like Mr. Tanquer had done of old, but, however, he managed his staff of employes, and saw that they did all that was required by him. To be sure, he had had the advantage of taking charge of a firm already established firm, but his success had been marvelous, and his men were devoted to him.

When his secretary entered at the close of the little magnate, for magnate he was, not only in Chicago, but in the whole financial men of the country, that gentleman felt himself called upon to congratulation in the fact that nature had endowed him with singularly equitable temper, for Wickersham was not always merciful to please on this particular day, and he assembled the whole force of clerks who was engaged in during the morning, wondered what had befallen the usually level-headed broker so arbitrary. Several press correspondents from the city were called to interview him on certain monetary question, were sent away with a very poor impression of his powers of pleasing, and trembled in his trim uniform. Decidedly, Harry Wickersham was not himself.

This idea was impressed upon a very pleasant, quiet gentleman, who was shown into Wickersham's office soon after the latter had returned from a hasty lunch, and he did not find himself at ease.

"See here, my boy, you must pull yourself together, or you will be ill," he said.

Wickersham wearily drew his hand over his face as though to draw it into better condition as he gave vent to the exclamation:

"Nonsense."

"No; but really. Then, too, you are undergoing great strain."

"You mean at the club?"

"Yes; and at that theater party last night. You should have been more careful."

"I know, but my nerves are so out of control that I have to be with people who understand me and the art. My company is a necessity to me, my dear boy."

"That man was right in calling you devil."

"Of course he was. Tanquer's a fine fellow, and I like him. We've had business relations together for years, but he's quite time to do so for years more, I hope. I have him under my thumb, and he knows it, but under the conditions I can't stay in the city."

"You had best not. Those reports are discouraging."

"Yes; either a master hand has been at work or the men do not understand their business."

"Hal, you know I would not give you incompetent men. Not only are my best men at work, but I have sent East for the pick of several service men. Some of the finest work is being done that ever came under my eyes, and you know I understand what I am talking about."

Wickersham wrung the hand of the man to whom he had entrusted the work of tracking down the murderer of Frank Welden, but said nothing. Before the subject could receive further discussion, the bell boy announced Mr. Helms, whom he had had instructions to admit. The three gentlemen had thoroughly sifted every particle of evidence together, but they went over it carefully once more, and Mr. Helms finaling his opinion with regard to his client.

"At first I was thoroughly convinced he was guilty, but now he is shielding some one."

"And we know who."

"Wickersham, we know absolutely nothing. What we may think, imagine, fear, or trust, is not knowledge."

"I am convinced."

Both Mr. Helms and the detective sighed. Really, Wickersham was hard to deal with. Not only had their assistance could not help smiling.

"See here, I know that my holding to an idea when once I get hold of it does make me unbearable, but you have patience and we will win out in the end."

As that was about all they could do, especially as the fiery man was offering almost unheard-of fees to both, they smiled in turn, and after talking a little further relative to some new moves anticipated, which might result in securing almost necessary information, they parted, the detective to carry out the instructions of Wickersham, and he to eagerly read a letter handed him just as they were leaving.

Dear Friend: If you know how unhappy your note to Tanquer's theater party made me, you would be satisfied. I had laughed and tried to look happy, and perhaps I did look so, but down in my heart I was miserable. After I reached my home and found your nice letter and those lovely flowers I threw up the valley, which I would have worn if I had received them in time, but I was at Mrs. Tanquer's to dinner, so could not receive and let me thank you for those sweet flowers. Yours in all sincerity, Ada Cunningham."

Few men were more astute than Wickersham in business matters. He was a man, though, of many sports and pursuits of his sex, yet perhaps because of this very reason, he had always admired women the more. Capable of gentle, tender, clinging perhaps a little deceitful, but very lovable. His love for the charming girl would not have been diminished in the least had he known that Forest Welden had been once a home, or that she had worn the violets simply because they matched her dress better than the offering. It soothed his disturbed self-love, to have her write him that she was happy. Happy, for he had seen her losing decidedly happy and contented the night before, and did not stop to inquire into motives, but simply admired all the more. Such a line in the course of events was rewarded by having his acquaintance happily consummated.

"Dear girl, how she did miss me," he whispered, forgetting for the moment the worries which were almost overpowering him, and it was in this softened frame of mind that Mr. Helms found Wickersham.

Extending his hand, Wickersham welcomed him cordially and invited him to help himself to a cigar.

"Thanks. Good weed."

"Yes; I get it over myself."

The two men puffed away in silence for a moment, then Wickersham commenced:

"I did not come in here to tell you that your cigars are good."

"Well, what did we do worse," laughingly.

"Have often. But all nonsense aside, I want to talk."

"Spit it out. If I can be of any service, you know I'm your man."

"Yes, I know it; but I have to intrude a private matter upon you."

"You can do that."

"I know it. Hal. You're a man who insists on confidence, so I won't bother myself. A man like you, self-reliant, a man who makes his confidences other men, must feel contempt for one like me."

"Rot."

"But I say yes," shading his working under his eyes with a hand almost as delicate as his sister's.

"Never in all my life have I done a single unselfish act. Always have taken care of me, and been very generous. Still, living for myself, I have been rich be myself. Forest, and I appreciate her."

"You young man is mad flushed crimson, but he could not but be touched by his friend's manner, and he continued:

"Much too good for me; but it is upon another matter I come today. As I have said, I am spoiled, ruined; I have lived a life which I would give a good deal to undo, and now I am reaping the harvest I sowed. Still, there is one deed which I can undo."

"Yes?"

"Wickersham, did you ever make a woman curse the day she saw you, did you—"

"I see."

"Yes."

"Well, what can I do?" and Wickersham looked at his friend with a kind of wild intensity, but with a kindly expression on his face.

"Just this, Hal. There's no use to tell you what I have done."

"I can imagine the story."

"No, you can't. You never imagine her beauty, her sweetness, the brutality with which I treated her. But, Hal, she's gone. I can't find her now."

"Well, that is best, under the conditions, is it not?"

"But, Hal, she's in no condition to battle with the world. I can find no trace of her anywhere. She left her position, her old home, and has vanished. Her face haunts me everywhere I go."

"And you want me—"

"To have the detailed up for me. I heard you say once that a friend of yours was head of a private inquiry agency. Have this done for me, Hal, and no matter what the expense, I'll foot it."

"From Miss Stonebrough's money?"

Forest's fists clenched, but he answered, quietly:

"I deserve that. No; I always have plenty of money. My lessons has been learned. I cannot pretend I am making a love match. I am forced into this, Hal; how, I cannot tell. I must marry Elizabeth Stonebrough, and when I do no woman will have a more faithful husband. What's more, no one dare say one word against her to my face, whatever they may say behind my back."

"And if I find this other girl?"

"All I want to do is to provide for her and our child. She refused money from me, but you might manage."

Wickersham hesitated. Then he looked at the young face before him. He thought of possible sorrow in store for him, of the pain and trouble written on the features which should still retain their boyish contour, but were worn, and his marvelous dark eyes encircled with blue rings half way down the cheeks.

"Have you a photo of her?" he asked, finally looking up.

"A dozen, but, Hal, you know her. She was that beautiful girl at the lace counter at Pesture's."

"Oh, the one Frank Welden dragged us all in to see."

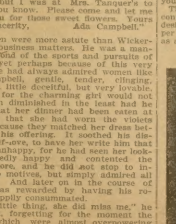
"Hal, you drove me mad with his admiration."

Wickersham hesitated no longer, but, leaning forward, stretched out his hand, and, grasping Forest's firmly, said, heartily:

"Very well, I'll do all within my power not only to find the poor girl, but to see that she is properly provided for, and, my boy, you are nearer being a man today than you ever have been during the whole of your thoughtless life."

This extremely interesting story will be continued next week's Ledger. Any one desiring to subscribe regularly for this paper will be sent a camera or patterns free, as announced on square thirteen and fifteen.

Looking Ahead.



Willie—Pa, ain't you goin' away on a vacation?

Father—Why do you ask, my boy?

Willie—Cause I want to make a date to punch dat Dubbins kid nex' door.

Billy's Beatitudeds.

By Willis Smartweed.

Blessud is the man who says he don't hav to ware sawy clothes.

Blessud is the small man, for thare haint soo much of him to have hives on.

Blessud are the fellers hi Jale, for they don't hav too set brekfust food.

Blessud is thee farmer, for hee haint a summer boarder to be fed and hee had to thee country.

Blessud is thee man whoo hax fitts, for hee can forget thee price of ice for a few minuits enywaze.

Blessud is thee parylized, for they can't feal thoce prickly heet.

Blessud is thee man at thee summer resorts, for hee has thee biggest pudding of um all.

Blessud is thee man that is busted, for hee don't hav to buy tickets to church soochibles.

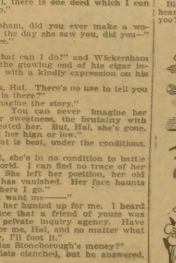
Blessud is thee man whoo has no frends, for hee don't hav too bi many invitashuns.

Blessud is thee little boy whoo dide last yeer from coloreyetus, for hee don't hav too doo it agin this yeer.

Blessud is thee quiet whoo can goe too thee summer resorts, for shee will hav moar fellers than thee others put together.

Blessud is thee deef man, for hee can't hear thee fellers say, "Is it hot enuff for yoo?"

Next Thing to It.



"Hast ever been kissed, maiden?"

"Naw; but I've had my cheek bitten by a dawg."

SUBURBANITES

Breakfast on Coffee, a Roll and a Rush for the Train.

The commuter who bolts down a few mouthfuls of food and hurries to catch the train usually catches dyspepsia as well.

The "coffee and roll" road to ill health is not necessary for there is an easy, pleasant way to get back to health and shake off all the coffee diseases by shifting to Postum Food Coffee. "For a number of years I was a business woman rising early and swallowing a roll and a cup of coffee just in time to catch a train. A feeling of nausea or agitation and a continual dullness in the eyes and head invariably followed my coffee breakfasts until one day a good angel in the guise of a woman friend made me try Postum Food Coffee in place of coffee.

"Always trying to be progressive in my daily life I accepted the advice and the result was I found Postum a delicious clear coffee-colored beverage suited to the stomach and satisfying to the appetite. After using Postum faithfully for a month I was surprised at the result in my health. All symptoms of dyspepsia or nervousness had disappeared and because of this marked benefit I reasoned that if such a simple and inexpensive remedy could prove such benefit in my case why was it not my duty to let other sufferers know about Postum. So I began to try to help my friends and I have helped many to shake off sickness by recommending Postum in place of coffee.

"There was one who was a victim of nervous dyspepsia and who craved coffee to such an extent that he invariably drank it in spite of medical advice not to do so and I could not persuade him to change, so I got his wife to give him Postum in the morning for a few days without saying anything to him about it. The result was really wonderful. He did not detect the change but noticed that he got over his indigestion. Then we told him the truth about it and now he takes his Postum regularly and is so far relieved of his nervousness that his physician predicts a speedy cure. He likes the Postum just as well as he used to love the coffee." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Music on the Pacific.

A Boston composer has set some of Walt Whitman's poems to music. It doubtless sounds like a load of scrapiron coming down a particularly rocky road on an especially quiet night.

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup for Children teething, softens the gums, reduces inflammation, allays pain, cures wind colic. 25 cents a bottle.

He Didn't Count.

"So your house is being built at last?"

"Yes."

"I thought the plans didn't suit you?"

"Oh, dear, no; but they suit my wife and the architect now."

Radisson on the Chippewa.

A new town in Sawyer County, Wis., on the Omaha Road. Located on both the Chippewa and Couderay rivers in center of most fertile and promising hardwood district. Good mascallonge, bass and pike fishing in both rivers. Exceptional opportunities for landseekers. If looking for a new location don't fail to see this new country. For map and full particulars write to Postmaster, Radisson, Sawyer Co., Wis., or to T. W. Teasdale, General Passenger Agent, C., St. P., M. & O. Ry., St. Paul.

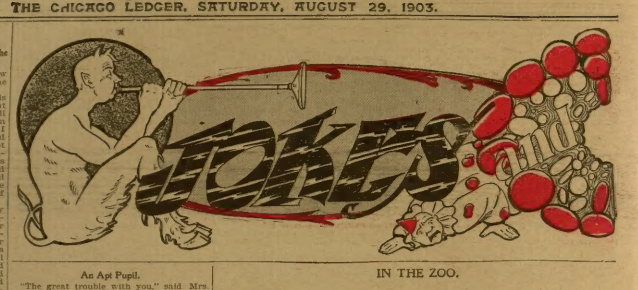
Cause for Joy.

"My darling! What delights you so? What is it that fills your eyes with the glad light of happiness, and——"

"Oh, Theobald, just think! Cook is going to remain with us after all! Mrs. Goodparty, for whom she was going to work, dropped dead last night. Oh, wasn't it too sweet of her; and, you know, I always fancied she disliked me."

"What do you sell dried apples for, young man?"

"'Cause I can't get any other job, ma'am."



An Apt Pupil.

"The great trouble with you," said Mrs. Jaggsby to her husband the next morning, "is your inability to say 'no.' Learn to say it at the proper time and you will have fewer headaches."

"I can see where you are right, my dear," replied he of the throbbing temples.

"By the way," continued Mrs. J., "I want to do a little shopping today. Can you let me have ten dollars?"

"No!" thundered the wily Jaggsby, without a moment's hesitation.

Paid What He Could.

Everbroke—I want to pay you something on account.

Tailor (rubbing his hands)—Ah, I'm glad to see you.

Everbroke—Yes; I want to pay you a compliment on your artistic way of dunning. Sir—not a word—you deserve it. Good morning.

More in Need of the Prayers.

The Parson—I intend to pray that you may forgive Casey for having thrown that brick at you.

The Patient—Mebbe yer riv'rence 'ud be saving toime if ye'd just wait till Oi git well an' then pray for Casey.

Evidently Truthful.

Miss Van Der Whoop—Yes, Miss Binns, I am the youngest member of one of the oldest families in New York.

Miss Binns (envious)—I don't doubt that it's the oldest family—if you're the youngest member!

Same Thing.

"Yes, Miss Octave is a very tidy girl. She always leaves her music on the rack when she is not playing."

"And when she is playing——"

"She keeps her hearers on the rack."

The Shearing Habit.

Hostess—Mozart, you know, lived in poverty, died in want, and was buried in the potter's field. How do you account for that?

Professor Thumskowski—I fear me he vent too often to dose barber shops.

The Envy of Rivals.

Dear—There goes a man whom I envy, and, curious as it may seem, he is not one.

Friend—How can that be?

Brute—We were both after the same woman—and I married her.

A Welcome for a Good Boy.

"Sure an' there's great rayjoicin' at one home tonight. Me boy Terence is pardoned from jail for good behavior."

"Sure, Mrs. Mulligan, an' yes ought to be proud av such a good b'y as that."

NO DOUBT OF IT.

"What do you sell dried apples for, young man?"

"'Cause I can't get any other job, ma'am."

IN THE ZOO.

The Monkey—I see they call you the wild ass. Why is that?

The Wild Ass—Well, wouldn't you be wild if you were always being called an ass?

Distressing Stomach Disease

Quickly cured to stay cured by the masterly power of Drake's Palmetto Wine. Invalids no longer suffer from this dreadful malady, because this remarkable remedy cures absolutely every form of stomach trouble. It is a cure for the whole world of stomach weakness and constipation, as well as a regulator of the kidneys and liver.

Only one dose a day, and a cure begins with the first dose. No matter how long or how much you have suffered you are certain of cure with one small dose a day of Drake's Palmetto Wine, and to convince you of this fact the Drake Formula Company, 96 Lake Street, Chicago, Ill., will send a trial bottle of Drake's Palmetto Wine free and prepaid to every reader of the Chicago Ledger who desires to make a thorough test of this splendid tonic Palmetto remedy. A postal card or letter will be your only expense.

Volcanoes Explained.

A negro preacher down South has discovered the real cause of the recent volcanic disasters. He said:

"Dear, my friends, resolves on axels, as we all know. Somefin' is needed to keep the axels greased, so when de earf was made, petrolyum was put inside for dat purpose. De Standard Oil Company come along an' strax dat petrolyum by borin' holes in de earf. De earf stix on its axels an' won't go round. Den dere is a hot box, just as of de earf was a big railway train—and den, my friends, dere is trouble."

Religion Made no Difference.

Police Inspector Schmitterger's associates are fond of telling an incident that occurred when he was newly appointed to the police force. One of the citizens on his beat was addicted to sleepwalking, and woke one night to find himself in the grasp of the zealous officer.

"Hold on!" cried the man. "You mustn't arrest me. I'm a somnambulist."

"I don't care a cuss what your religion is —you can't walk the streets in your nightshirt!"

A Gambler Rebuked.

"I am a self-made man," said the proud individual.

"Well, you are all right, except as to your head," commented the other part of the conversation.

"How's that?"

"The part you talk with is out of proportion to the part you think with."

A Sure Sign of Poverty.

Mr. Newrocks—What sort of folks are the Bluebloods next door, Mariah?

Mrs. Newrocks (patronizingly)—Pleasant; but they must be frightfully hard up. They haven't got any mechanical attachment for their piano and have to play it by hand.

A Cautious Hero.

Wigger—But when their boat capsized, how did it happen that you gave your attention to saving the man instead of the woman?

Braadt—A man, you know, wouldn't feel it incumbent upon him to want to marry me to show his gratitude.

Social Talents.

"Sometimes you hear it remarked of women that they have social talents.

The Greek talent was $1,182.19.

The social talent, however, is rather more, owing to the high price of provisions. For while society can dance as well as eat, it is often too warm to dance.

Some women are born talented, some marry talents, while some have the faculty of beating their bills.

Social talents, like other forms of excessive wealth, are exempt from taxation.

Summer Thought.

"This heat is enough to drive a man to suicide."

"If he's a fool."

"I'm not so sure."

"Well, a good man won't kill himself, anyway, and a man who isn't good certainly would be foolish to kill himself to escape the heat."

Entertaining the Pastor.

The Rev. Dr. Fourthly was making one of his pastoral calls at the Upjohn mansion.

"Pa, doctor," said little Johnny during a pause in the conversation, "I wish you would tell me what you think of the doctrine of prestidigitation."

Home Violence.

Sam—Yes, Ah was in de great waltahs' strike.

Remus—Was dere any violence?

Sam—Ah shud say so. When Ah went home wildest my wages mah wife rapped me wid a broomstick en shet de doah.

Similar but Different.

Timkins—What are you doing now?

Simkins—Oh, I have a summer engagement on the beaches.

Timkins—What! As an actor?

Simkins—No; as a driver for a lumber dealer.

Tugboat Smoke.

"I am afraid they'll catch me," whispered the fugitive. "The description states I have on a white shirt."

"It won't be white long," assured the friend, "you have to cross one of the Chicago River bridges."

John's Mishap.

A Chinaman once lost his queue,
And he didn't know what to dueue;
He searched here and there
And almost everywhere,
But it never more came to his vueue.

Down and Out.

Uptown—Say, isn't that richly-dressed woman across the street your cook?

Suburb—No; we did make our home with her for a while, but she discharged us last week.

Saw His Finish.

"Oh! Oh!" exclaimed Mrs. Naggs. "I've bitten off the end of my tongue!"

"Well, I certainly feel sorry for myself," rejoined the heartless Naggs. "Hereafter there will be no end to your tongue."

The Men and the Maidens.

The fair Lady Maude made no effort to conceal her disdain.

"Instead of the knight errant we have the mere knight of the garter," she exclaimed, with curling lip.

"And in the stead of the maiden who kept a dragon guessing, we have the maiden whom a garter snake can beleaguer!" quoth Sir Lancelot, with infinite pathos.

Light on the Subject.

He—I suppose you are aware of the tender feeling I have for you?

She—No, I'm quite in the dark.

He—That being the case permit me to suggest that we strike a match.

Even Worse.

Stubb—No, I can't get along with my wife. Everything I say she retorts: "I beg to differ with you!"

Penn—You are lucky, old man. My wife just differs without taking the time to beg.

Each to His Taste.

Father—What is the use of my earning money if you spend it as fast as I make it?

Son—That's all right, father. I enjoy spending it just as much as you do making it.

Smoking Worse Than Even.

Jim—Habit is an awful thing. Old Cyrus Meaner, who put through that deal on the small stockholders, is smoking again.

Jack—Why, I thought he was dead.

Jim—He is.

A Wingless Angel.

Bilson—Jimson seems to be devoted to his wife.

Timson—No wonder. She is the most angelic creature I ever saw. Why, I believe she could even keep a girl.

Just Possible.

Willie—Say, pa, why is a girl called a miss?

Pa—She is probably so called, my son, because she is unable to hit anything she throws at.

Our Domestics.

"Pa," said little Willie, who had been reading a cigar store advertisement, "what's imported and domestic?"

"A servant girl," replied pa, promptly.

The Cause of His Fervor.

"The deacon seems to be makin' an awful long prayer," whispered Aunt Martha. "Yes," muttered Uncle Silas, "I s'pose he's got another bet up on some hoss race."

Tears.

A damsel weeps because she's blue.
"What good, dear heart, will weeping do?"
"A lot," says she, and lifts her head,
And lo! her nose at least is red.

MERCIFUL RESTRAINT.

Mistress—I understand you left your last place without a character.
Maid—Sure, ma'am, I didn't like to tell the gal that was goin' there what kind of a character the missus 'ad got, so I just said nuthin'.

Better Than.

"Don't you think," asked the anxious young playwright after the first performance, "that I might have improved it some by putting it in three instead of four acts?"

"Well, no," the critic replied, "I hardly think so. The curtain wouldn't be down as much in that case as it is now."

High.

Customer—Block me out a pair of mutton-chop whiskers.

Barber—Yes, suh. Cost yuh quahtah, suh.

Customer—Ain't that pretty steep?

Barber—Well, ments am pow'ful high, suh.

Mud.

"Any mud-slinging?"

"Yes; they printed our man's portrait, taken when he was 22. But we soon spiked their guns."

"Yes."

"Yes, sir; we printed their man's oration when he graduated from the high school."

Favorable Comment.

Clara—How well you looked at the fancy ball.

Maud—Think so?

Clara—Oh, yes; you had on such a becoming mask.

Did It Tickle His Fingers?

Ping—How did that old deaf mute injure his knuckles so?

Pong—Why, he tried to crack one of Chauncey's latest jokes.

Football.

"They had the finest tally-ho there, but they were dreadfully unlucky."

"Yes; they acted as if they thought it was grand opera instead of football."

THE VITAL QUESTION.

Visitor—Have I time to bid my wife good-by before the train goes?
Landlord—I don't know, sir. How long have you been married?

AGENTS WANTED

STARK TRIED — best by Test—79 YEARS. We WANT MORE SALESMEN PAY CASH Weekly Stark Nursery, Louisiana, Mo.; Dansville, N.Y.
When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

$75 Month and Expenses to experienced man with rig to introduce our position permanent; self-seller. Please Mrs. Co., Dept. G, Cincinnati, O.
When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

DETECTIVE Shrewd, reliable man wanted in every locality. Act under instructions; no experience necessary. For full particulars write (American Detective Ass'n Indianapolis, Ind.
When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

BOYS EARN $$$ INSTEAD OF PRIZES.
With $$$ you can buy whatever you want, or earn your money. Send me your name and I will send you a way to make $$$. Wm. H. Richardson, Patent, Iowa.
When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

$3 a Day Sure Send us your address and we will show you how to make $3 a day absolutely sure, we furnish the work and teach you free, you work in the locality where you live. Send us your address and we will explain the business fully, remember we guarantee a clear profit of $3 for every day's work, absolutely sure. Write us to-day. ROYAL MFG. CO., Box 1101, Detroit, Mich.
When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

AGENTS WANTED.

Either Sex. No canvassing. No soliciting. In time from your regular occupation. No one will know you are our representative. No capital, outfit or experience needed. Easy, permanent, honorable and profitable work for any man or woman. Address
A. W. KING, Box 7004 Ft. Wayne, Ind.
When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

Free Gold Watch

Both ladies' and gents' Solid Filled Watches, equal in appearance to a $25.00 Gold Filled Watch, guaranteed for 20 years, sent FREE to any one of either sex who will write us at once and mention this paper. We are the largest jewelry house in the world to offer such a gift. We send the jewelry prepaid, when sold send us the $2 and we will send you the watch, also a present. Address at once
BOND JEWELRY CO., DEPT. 34, CHICAGO.
When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

Special Price Only.... 10c.

PITTSBURGH EGG SEPARATOR
It separates the white of the egg from the yolk without breaking the yolk. No kitchen complete where eggs are used. No kitchen complete without this device. Price only 10c. for sample.
Agents Wanted. | W. G. WATKINS, Box 1505, Pittsburg, Pa.
When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

FREE GOLD WATCH

This watch, has American movement fully regulated to keep correct time. The case is Solid Gold Filled, guaranteed to wear 20 years. The Solid Gold Watch represented here is being given FREE to boys and girls or anyone for selling a few packages of our handsome jewelry at 10c. each. Send your address and we will send the jewelry postpaid. When sold send us the $2 and we will send you the watch, also a present. Address
EMIE MFG. CO., Dept. 51, Chicago
When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

Rider Agents Wanted

with a new town built on every bicycle
'03 Models high grade $9 to $15
1903 & 1902 Models, good makes $7 to $12
1901 "ENCHANTRESS" $6.50
1900 "ARIEL" $5.50
Great Factory Clearing Sale. We ship to anyone on approval no $ in advance. NO $ required until you receive and approve of your bicycle. EARN A BICYCLE selling orders for us. Write at once for our large catalog and special offer. Do not buy a bicycle or a pair of tires from anyone at any price until you get our catalog and our offer. It will save you big money. Tires, coaster brakes, lamps, wheels, parts and sundries at half price. AUTOMOBILES Bargains in second hand Autos and Motor Cycles. All makes and styles. If interested write for our bargain list.
MEAD CYCLE COMPANY, Dept. M-55, Chicago.
When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

AGENTS WANTED

EXTRACT AGENTS how to make it at Vanilla for 75c. per ounce. Formula free. THE SPICE CRAFT CHEMICAL CO., 127 LAKE POINT, WIS.
When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

WANTED GOOD, LIVE AGENTS
To take orders for our Fireside, overcoats and trousers, ex-and made strictly to order by UNION WORKMEN. Suits and overcoats from $4.98 up. Pants from $1.98 up. Write for samples and full line. Agents wanted in every town. Who can do good business. Write at once for particulars as to terms, territory and inducements.
The Warrington Pants & Worsted Mills, Dept. 27, Chicago.
When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

WANTED AGENTS

Everywhere by Large Transportation Co.
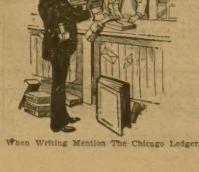
In every city, large or small, to place issue of stock for the purpose of increasing its terminal facilities. To the right parties a big proposition will be given. Valuable concessions over freight and passenger business. The stock of this company pays the largest regular dividends of any transportation shares in the United States. Exceptional opportunity for investment. Will be sold in blocks to individuals or agents to suit. Apply for agency for the company. For complete information, address at once, "B-LINE" 1602 Title & Trust Bldg., Chicago.
When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

MAGIC BILL BOOK!

An entirely new and useful article. Can be used as any ordinary pocket book. Will be sent by mail to any address for 25 cents. AGENTS WANTED.
W. G. WATKINS & CO., Box 1505, Pittsburg, Pa.
When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

BIG MAIL FREE!



Would you like to get a lot of letter, circulars and packages? You probably know that manufacturers supply houses, wholesalers and publishers buy names and addresses for the purpose of sending samples, advertising matter, papers and circulars to. Good names and addresses are hard to get and are quite expensive. We publish an Agents' Directory List containing names and addresses carefully arranged in alphabetical order. We send these Directory Lists to concerns we know are anxious for good names to send advertising matter to. Write your name very plainly so the printer will not make a mistake; be sure to give your street number and town also plainly written so that any mail addressed to you will reach you without fail. We have been publishing the Agents' Directory List for several years and refer to the editor of this paper who will tell you we are reliable. All we ask is that you send 10 cents in silver and we will enter your name in our Agents' Directory List as above stated. Write to-day. Address
AGENTS' DIRECTORY LIST, INDIANA INDIANA COUNTY, PA.
When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

TANNING HUMAN SKIN.

Happening to come across the other day the catalogue of a book auction in 1884, when a book on the Constitution of the French Republic, bound in human skin in the year 1793, was offered for sale, a book lover was prompted to inquire whether such human skin had ever been put to such a use before or since.

The inquiry led to a number of surprising revelations. It was not merely during the excesses of the French Revolution that such things were done, but as long ago as the thirteenth century he found there were in existence several such books, including a Latin bible very handsomely engrossed upon a woman's skin. In 1765 the "French Encyclopedie" gave a recipe for tanning human skin, and stated that M. Sue, a surgeon in Paris, had presented the king with a pair of slippers made of human skin according to this prescription.

During the reign of Napoleon III. a copy of the "Decrees," written on human skin, was found in the library of the Sorbonne and transferred to the Tuileries. Abdelkader, the one-eyed chief of the Hussites, ordered in his will that his skin should be tanned and made into a drum. "The noise which my skin will make," said he, "will frighten away all our enemies and put them to flight."

It was, however, at the time of the French Revolution that this art was developed to its greatest extent. A man presented himself one day at the bar of the Convention and announced that he had devised a simple and original method for procuring leather in abundance. The committee of public safety granted him a concession in the Castle of Meudon, where he carried on his work with a certain amount of success. In return for the concession the members of the committee were privileged to buy among them the first book bound made of human skin.

The tannery of Meudon acquired considerable notoriety. A great number of books were bound with the leather turned out there, and Philippe Egalite, Duke of Orleans, encouraged the tannery by wearing a pair of breeches made there with human skin at a ball in the Palais-Royal. The republican Duke, Hayard tells us, made himself a name by his ferocity in the wars of La Vendee, not the fashion of wearing nankin trousers in the army, always wearing a pair at battles and at reviews.

An old soldier who had taken part in most of the campaigns of the French Revolution, a writer of reading in the first decade of this century that he had owned a superb fine garment of this kind, made entirely of one piece. An architect, who was one of the leaders of the infamous Black Band of France in 1815, which for a long time terrorized the country districts in the west of France, wore a jacket made of human skin, cosely and exceedingly comfortable.

The infamous Saint-Just, when at the height of his power during the Reign of Terror, caused a young and beautiful girl, who had refused his advances, to be arrested and sent to the guillotine. After the execution he obtained possession of the body, caused it himself to be flayed, tanned and made into a waistcoat, which he wore until the day of his death. The tannery of Meudon did a large trade carried on the process on an extensive scale, and must have made a good deal of money by tanning the skins of the victims of the Revolution for every sort of commercial purpose.

Oil extracted from human bodies was also placed upon the market at that time.

Since those days the process has naturally become much rarer, but Dibdin mentions how at a comparatively recent date a collector procured a treatise on sport bound in stag's skin: a copy of Fox's "History of James II." bound in fox's skin, and a book on angling bound in human skin. In all the narrative of the adventures of a highwayman was bound in his own skin at Boston, Mass., with the inscription in Latin outside. This book was bound in the skin of Walton.

Knew All About It.

Mrs. Slim—Didn't you never experience no tender feelings?

Bulky Butters—Yes, mum; once I rode seventeen miles on a tender an' I was pretty nigh jarred to a pulp.

Accounted for.

A bald-headed professor reproving a youth for scratching his head, said, "Don't fight with our heads at this college." The youth reflected a moment, then replied, "Ah, I see. That's how you have butted all your hair off."

Favorable Indication.

"Miss Charmington says she is very fond of animals," remarked Silggins' sister.

"Perhaps there's hopes for me, then," said Silggens. "She called me a brute the other day."

DENVER DICK'S STRATEGY;

OR, DOWNING THE BOSS OF TELLURDIE.

BY COLONEL WILLIAM PERRY.

(Copyright by W. D. Boyce Co.)

Begun in No. 30, July 25. Subscriptions can begin with this issue, or back copies can be procured from news stands, or our agents, or by mail from office of publication.

CHAPTER XVIII.

A STRUGGLE AGAINST DEATH.

But swift as was the motions of the boss of Telluride, those of Denver Dick were even quicker.

The flash of steel in the lantern's light came the report of the Denver Sport's pistol, accompanied by a flash of fire.

The knife fell clattering to the floor and Murdoch uttered an exclamation of pain and rage as his arm sank, shattered at the wrist.

"I do not want to kill you if it can be helped," began Denver Dick. "Ah! will you?"

The boss of Telluride, beside himself with fury, struck at Dick, who made himself a man-hunter, regardless of the fatal revolver.

Denver Dick could have shot him dead, but he desired to capture him alive for justice to deal with, so dropping the weapon, he seized Murdoch's left arm, in which a heavy revolver was clasped, and bending and twisting that member harshly, caused the weapon to fall.

At the same time he pressed Murdoch backward and thrust out his foot, giving the boss a dexterous trip that brought the latter to the ground.

"Hands up!" hissed Denver Dick. "Give me the cloth strips. We will have this fellow to rights in a jiffy!"

As he bound the man, Murdoch subsided into a dogged silence.

"Look at his long, strong fingers, Mr. Bryant," said the Sport, as he was examining Murdoch's wounded arm. "Are they not well fitted to squeeze the breath out of human windpipes?"

"Do you mean to say that he is really the famous Jack the Strangler the papers were full of several years back?" asked the horrified old gentleman.

"If appearances and detectives don't lie, he is bound to be the man."

The wretch exclaimed Miss Bryant, gazing upon him in horror.

Murdoch's grim, pale looks could have killed, would certainly have effected such an end, but all he said was:

"I only hope the powder will go off. If I am to die, I want plenty of company. Curse you all!"

"Had we better not shout for help?" asked the old gentleman, as the last fuse was made to this suggestion they heard the key turn in the door, and Casey was flung by Casey, the innkeeper, who stared at the four in astonishment.

"Heavens!" he cried. "And here ye are at last. We've been a huntin' for ye everywhere."

Turning back, he shouted in his loudest tones.

"This way, boys! Here is Denver Dick and his friends, and, by the powers! he hasn't got Rid Murdoch with him, too."

But Gentry, pushing the Bryants before him, came forward.

"Help them folks out of here, quick! The whole place may blow up at any minute! I will fetch the prisoner."

Though he had comprehending the meaning of these words, Casey and two others took hold of Mr. Bryant and Miss, conveying them through the large cellar. All were vaguely uneasy.

The Colorado Sport turned back and picked up the boss, who, recoiling from this, managed to burst all the strips but the weakest.

"Those strips of cloth are rotten, I guess," commented Denver Dick. "But here goes with you, anyway."

The cellar was a large man and the boss of Telluride a small one, and the latter's disabled arm assisted the desperate Murdoch to resist no further, as Denver Dick picked him up and followed the others into the larger cellar.

The Bryants, with Casey and others, had already disappeared. As he was hastening toward the stairs with his struggling burden a fierce hissing sound near by struck his ear.

"That must be the fuse," he said. "Where is it? I may be able to put it out."

"You shall put out nothing," declared Murdoch, now desperate, through the failure of all his schemes, and conscious that the mean impossible for the same was Dick Gentry. "You shall die. We will go to hell together!"

So saying, he flung his arms around the Colorado Sport, regardless of the pain caused by his wounded wrist, and endeavored to prevent the former from doing anything whatever.

"I don't want to hurt you unnecessarily, my man," said Gentry, "but time presses. Let go of me!"

Red Murdoch clung only the closer and also wound his legs about Denver Dick, though groaning the while and cursing with pain.

"If you won't!" exclaimed Gentry, angrily, "take that!"

Exerting his own matchless strength to the full, he tore Murdoch's grasp loose and flung him half way across the cellar, where he lay half turned for a few seconds, then crawled weakly behind some boxes and barrels that lay close by, in a last effort to shelter himself from the impending disaster.

Robbed of any power to force death upon Gentry his own desire for life revived as the imminence of a horrible death was dimned in his ears by the loudly sputtering fuse.

In the meantime the Colorado Sport endeavored to locate the source that indicated the locality of the powder, though his heart beat rapidly as he thought that each passing second might be his last.

"I must ascertain what those stairs," he concluded to himself. "Ah! Here is a door!"

He attempted to open it, but Burl Yates had locked it and cast away the key, as the Sport found on his return from below.

Denver Dick applied his ear to the keyhole and no longer doubted as to where the powder was. Directly inside, and apparently almost within reach of his arm, but for the intervening door, sputtered the fatal fuse.

The situation was maddening. There was a possibility of escape for himself, but for the others and for the lives of any who might be in the building above. He also feared, that if a fire was started by the explosion, it might spread, the flames owing to the inflammable nature of its construction.

"Ha! Murdoch may have the key," thought Denver Dick.

He looked about, but the boss of Telluride had secured behind the packing cases and barrels.

"Murdoch, where are you?" he called. "I want the key to the door where the powder is. Answer, man!"

Dick did not know it, but the truth was Red Murdoch had at this juncture fainted from loss of blood in his right arm, the wrist and the violence with which he had been hurled by Denver Dick.

The latter, meanwhile, had no time to search for the boss, looked around him in desperation, when his eye lighted upon the beam which had been used in battering down the door head of the cellar.

It was long and heavy, being a good load for two ordinary men, but Gentry seized it, raised it to the height of his shoulder, by great strength, brought it against the small door and battered the same clean in.

The door fell in at the first crash, thus giving the very obstruction he

"Murdoch, before you go, tell me one thing.

"I hate you. You have thwarted me. But, go ahead. I'm a dead man, anyhow."

"How many murders have you really committed?"

"If I had my strength back—you and I—fight—it out. I'd—kill—you. That would be one more."

"You are now practically a dead man, Murdoch. The affairs of this world are over for you. Why not confess—now?"

"Never! I hate you—I hate everybody. Jack, the Strangler—"

The voice of the boss, which had rapidly grown weaker, subsided into unintelligible gasps and mutterings.

"Yes," said Dick Gentry, eagerly. "What about him?"

Murdoch groaned heavily, and seemed to exert himself in spite of the terrible pains that were undoubtedly eating his life away.

"Locked—back room—this—house—"

But there was no further reply, and after a few moans and gasps the man lay still, and the Colorado Sport felt sure that the arch conspirator against the Bryants and the cattlemen was dead.

That is an end of Jack the Strangler," observed Gentry. "Now, for myself. Will I ever get out of here alive?"

Renewed shouts from above instilled further hope into his spirits, and lifting up his voice once more he called for aid.

CHAPTER XX.

CONCLUSION.

Denver Dick's call was at last answered and ready hands were soon at work throwing aside the debris over his place of imprisonment.

But looking again through the crevice of the door he saw that the danger was threatening him from the fire among the ruins in the main cellar, which had not only reached the body of Murdoch, but was creeping nearer to the imprisoned man, who now had only a shivered wooden door between himself and the flames.

"If will not be roasted alive," he exclaimed.

Then he urged the rescuers to hurry and seizing the edge of the door he began the slimmest possible way of squeezing himself up by its aid.

The heavy sleeper tore the clothes from his back and bruised the skin, but still he persevered, and finally stood upright, though almost wedged to the wall by the weight of timbers behind.

The heat and smoke were becoming unbearable. He heard the tones of Miss Bryant, directly speaking to her father.

I guess all the rest of them are safe," he thought. "If only these timbers would catch hold of—" and then Casey, who was stout and rather overfed, "Well I'll pull 'em up to bust, and bring a thrym!"

The Colorado Sport slipped the noose under a strong arm, and while some of those below pried the timbers back with poles, Casey drew him through the narrow aperture thus made to safety.

"All right on our side!" cried his first words as his friends gathered round and shook hands.

"Yis; but begorra! the hotel's gone!" said Casey. "However, I've got a good insurance on the same."

Mr. Bryant and Ellen were both there, ready to congratulate Denver Dick on his escape and listen to his account of Murdoch's death.

But little more remains to be told.

The fire was subdued by hard work and the lawn was saved, the blaze being confined mainly to the house where the explosion took place and the Telluride Hotel.

A party was sent to the Devil's Stairs, the mysterious appointed by Red Murdoch for his men to meet him, but the place was deserted. It was concluded that Burl Yates, after escaping by way of the old mine, had given the alarm and that the remainder of the gang, now without their leader, had reconciled that Telluride was too hot a place for them and had fled.

They did not return, and with Murdoch, or Jack the Strangler, out of the way, the town became quiet and peaceable once more.

Casey rebuilt his hotel, being aided by the Bryants, who found no more trouble in repossession of little Ellen mine, which soon began paying large dividends.

Remembering Murdoch's last words, Dick Gentry had the back cellar wall of Murdoch's house torn down, as it was unhurt by the explosion, and found not only another secret mode of exit from the house, but three skeletons, which were afterward identified as those of certain men of means from the East, with whom the boss had had dealings.

The large reward for Jack the Strangler was finally paid to the Colorado Sport, who departed for Denver, followed by the good wishes of all for having downed the toughs of Telluride, and thus made secure the future fortune of the town.

(The end.)

A Seaside Chat.

"How do you do?" said the man-o'-war as he sailed past the lightship Arabella B. "Why, howdyou, Mr. Newsarge?" replied the lady lightship, waving her bow at him.

"How are you enjoying light housekeeping?" asked the man-o'-war, continuing his progress up the channel.

"Pretty well," she answered, "but it is so hard to keep my buoys behaving properly. I think two or three of them ran away last night. If you see any of them playing about in the channel please tell them to hurry home, won't you?"

"Oh, don't be too severe with them," urged the man-o'-war. "We older fellows find the care of our own children quite enough to keep us busy. Remember that I have a few buoys."

And so both her forewards to turned to salute the fortress guilty.—Judge.

An Evident Absurdity.

Elsie—Miss Timmins told me today in the geography lesson that Stonehenge was over 2,000 years old.

Jack—What nonsense! Why, it's only last June!

THE BLACK SHEEP.

BY LOUIE GLENN.

A pretentious house in a genteel uptown street, and a stylish lady very fashionably dressed, were the home and the mother of Fred Vincent.

A shoddily-dressed maid answered the summons of her mistress.

"Are the children in from school yet, Martha?"

"Yes, ma'am—yes, I should say, for that's Master Charlie's ring now."

"Well, keep them downstairs until dinner; I want to finish the book in quiet."

Before Martha could get downstairs, the bounding steps of the romping, rosy-cheeked children, two boys and a girl, were heard on the stairs, and despite Martha's remonstrances they trooped into their mother's presence.

"Mamma, is dinner ready? I'm nearly starved; and the books, pencils and slates were thrown hither and thither on bed and chair.

"Oh! children, you make me so nervous; go down and play in the yard until dinner. But, where's Fred?"

"Oh, kept in again, of course," said Will.

"It wasn't his fault," spoke up little Charlie, who was Fred's champion when others blamed him. "Walter Brent was taken ill in school—so ill he could hardly walk, and Fred helped him home. When he came back he was too late for recitation in astronomy, and he was kept in for an hour as punishment. He won't beg off, as we do when we're called up, and he never was either; but he feels badly. I know, for I turned pale and fairly trembled, but never said a word."

Yes, he's too stubborn to offer an excuse. That boy will worry my life out yet. He's so uncommunicative; no reserved—never comes and tells me his troubles, like other children. Ah, well! there always must be one black sheep in every flock, they say."

As these thoughtless words fell from the mother's lips, Fred, who had just come in, was passing the door.

No one but the sensitive boy knew what a pang they gave him. It was not the first time that he had heard the remark and had gone to his room, his heart sadly aching, and when, with burning brow, he made his appearance at table, his mother was pronounced sulkiness, and he was often reprimanded for imaginary faults.

Yes, I am a black sheep, surely. Oh! why do not my parents love me as they do Will and Walter Sue? They do not, I never take half the pains to please that I do, yet they are always petted and excused if they don't want to do a thing; but no one cares for me—no one loves me—I'm so miserable, so unhappy!"

Thus year after year passed, and the misguided parents continued to utter their complaints about Fred's bad disposition, still called him the black sheep, and predicted that his career in life would be disreputable. He became discouraged and reckless, as his mother's slights at home continued, until he grew up to manhood.

With such training he lost his self-respect, and in time was viewed as a morose, ungracious, cynical misanthrope.

His less gifted brothers were popular, and held aloof from Fred. He never was understood until too late to remedy the mistake.

Heart-broken and dispirited, he sought to bury in oblivion the knowledge of his wrongs by deep draughts of the intoxicating bowl. He died unpitied and unmourned—a poor, miserable drunkard.

As the last flicker of his life was dying out he roused from his stupor and quite unstrung his mother's nerves by exclaiming:

"Will you, then, be so cruel as to send me to my account unforgiven? Can even the cruel words, but they have been my death! Had you loved me, given me your sympathy, or let words of kindly cheer pass my lips, you would not have had to bury a drunkard. I had not lain here dying of intemperance. I had no love for the stimulating draught, but it brought oblivion of my wrongs. I drank it—drank it to drown my despair and thoughts."

Need we depict the agonies and remorse of those parents as they consigned to the grave the remains of their lost son?

Fathers! mothers! take warning!

Watch carefully and tenderly the temperaments and dispositions of your children. Encourage them to confide in your willing ears all their troubles or projects. Sympathize with them in their joys and sorrows, and in that

Weed out all its rotten, tempered with love, are necessary to the proper training of your children, but, above all, have a care that partiality is banished from the household. The well-doing and salvation of the precious charge committed by Providence to your care depends on your discharge of these duties.

Texts for Each Occasion.

The father of a 18-year-old youngster is not a strict prohibitionist, the son, like young Americans generally, has his individual views on the temperance question. He is a member of a juvenile temperance society, which till lately has met with the approval of his parents.

One day not long ago the boy's father came in from a long drive with a friend. Both men were chilled, and the father mixed a hot toddy for both. As he was about to raise his glass to his lips his son came into the room and saw what was going on. He stepped forward heroically, raised his arm, and spoke:

"Stop!" said he, "stop and think! It is a mocker and strong drink is raging."

The father emptied his glass, and, taking his son by the arm, led him into an adjoining apartment. There he placed the young reformer face downward, across his knee and chastised him.

"My son," said he, "you will please commit to memory this saying, 'Honor thy father.' Also, itemize not thine elders."

Since then the youth has had hard doubts about the efficacy of golden texts.

What the Dog Looked Like.

A little girl thus described a dachshund she had seen: "It was one of those funny ones that have to walk sideways."

"No other," said the boy, "you must know the sort. It is a dog that only has four legs, but looks as if it ought to have six." Public opinion is another clear definition of the same animal: "The dog with the Louis XIV. legs."

Popular Expression Illustrated.

A WEIGH DOWN SOUTH

We will start any bright boy in business
Any ambitious boy can begin at once to establish a business that will pay well by selling
The Saturday Evening Post
No money required. We will mail absolutely FREE ten copies the first week. These can be sold for five cents each, and will provide the capital for the next supply. The work is easy. Can be done on Saturday afternoon after school hours, and on Saturday.
$200.00 in Extra Cash Prizes will be distributed NEXT MONTH to boys selling FIVE, or more, COPIES WEEKLY
459 ARCH STREET
The Curtis Publishing Co. Phila. Pa.

Or, Boy Sailors of the China Sea. || Adrift on a Junk; ||

By St. George Rathborne.

[Copyright, 1903, by W. B. Boyce Co.]

Begun in No. 30, July 25. Subscriptions can begin with that issue, or back copies can be procured from news stands, or our agents, or by mail from office of publication.

CHAPTER VII.

THE TYPHOON ARRIVES ON TIME.

It was some time before Tressie recovered, and then only after Bob had trickled cold water upon her face.

The boys tried to comfort her with such assurances as they could manufacture, though both realized how slender the chances were that Captain Baxter and Mr. Atkins would either make land or run across some friendly vessel before the typhoon came. Even a fully realized how vast the ocean is until it spans Providence he is cast away and measures the watery horizon day by day, week in and week out, for a sail.

The boys' own situation was not any too satisfactory, threatened with double peril as they were, and it required considerable thought on the part of the boys to arrange any sort of a plan; for at every sound they fully expected the mutineers were coming to force the door and make them prisoners, perhaps to consign them to the same fate that had been meted out to the captain, or something even worse, should the more desperate characters have gained control.

The morning passed without an alarm, showing that those whom they had good reason to fear were too busily engaged in examining and gloating over the spoils they had won to think of wasting time with other matters.

Julian was thankful for small favors, and hoped they might be kept busy a still longer time, though the end seemed inevitable.

He noticed that Tressie went to the opening of the door more frequently than any one else, daughter, and accustomed as she was to all of the deep, so that a storm in itself had little terror for her; but it was quite a different matter when a loved one was in a shell of a yawl, and only two palms of land to be reached.

Julian himself felt that the chances of poor Baxter coming out of the adventure alive were extremely problematical, for had they been so were their own, according to the way things looked even if they did have a stanch vessel under them, against which many a hurricane had met its ruin.

So noon came and went with little change so far as their condition could be taken into consideration.

There was a change outside, though, which Julian noted with considerable gratification, for the heavens had clouded over, and from horizon to horizon an ugly pall now hung over them, while the wind came no longer in steady and refreshing draughts, but with but pofts as though from a furnace.

Bob, who had sailed these seas, knew full well what this meant from experience, even as his companion did through general observation. The typhoon, most dreaded of all the storms that buffet poor Jack about and threaten him with a watery grave, was about to burst upon them; and before the night or nightfall they would be in the grasp of a twister, hurled this way and that, perhaps across the seas and buried at times under their avalanche of foam-crested waves.

Under such conditions it behooved the new skipper to be alert, for should he go to sleep or drink to befuddle his wits in the least there would be small chance of the Wanderer surviving the tempest.

That was why Julian worried now.

The girl did not appear to be in the least concerned over their condition, all of her sympathy going out toward the parent whom she feared she had set eyes on for the last time; though Julian feared the same doom was about to overwhelm the boy who was on board.

About the middle of the afternoon the wind broke loose, and shrieked about the cordage of the vessel like a legion of demons escaped from below. Once in a while keen ears could detect shouts from the deck, but these were few and far between for a little, since it told them the crew had been on the alert, and were not caught napping by the storm.

Indeed, Julian knew this from the time the gale broke upon them, for had it not been so wise they must have perished in the first round.

The brig held up gallantly, and had Captain Baxter been on deck to give orders perhaps they would have weathered it in better shape; but Mate Pandy, while good in his way, was not the equal of the old skipper, and sooner or later might make a blunder that would prove serious to them all.

Night fell amid such riotous scenes as Julian had certainly never before witnessed, so much so that the Indian hurricane must take a back seat after this experience.

A dozen times he felt certain they were overwhelmed, and a spasm of dreadful alarm would seize upon his heart, for the sake of a boy, after all, and life held much that was sweet to him. Twice, at least, he heard the crash of falling spars and knew that the wrecked brig was being dismembered of her upper works, for she commenced to show a difference in her movements, wallowing in the seas like a great whale, having lost much of her buoyancy with such a sea-anchor dragging aft.

Few vessels could have stood the pounding thus received and Julian gave the old Wanderer credit for being what she was—a well-built ship.

Once he had opened the cabin door and made his way to the deck, but he found such utter chaos reigning there that he came back, resolved to meet whatever was impending in the company of the others; and when Bob and Tressie finally joined him they had the light of the lamp which they contrived to keep burning, the hope which they had cherished fled, cowed and went out, for they realized that their chances were not one in a thousand.

Julian believed he lived years that horrible night.

Again and again he shook his watch and held it to his ear, thinking it must have stopped, so slowly did the seconds turn into minutes and the latter crawl around to hours.

He yearned for morning to come, though what difference that would make in their desperate situation he could not have told, since that time before ever an Indian dawn on the gloom of night, and every mariner would, if given his choice, meet his fate while daylight showed him what he had to face.

When the faint streak of an angry dawn did creep athwart the horizon, what a riotous scene it disclosed to the young eyes that watched so wearily for signs of shore! Mile upon mile was we towered mountain high, rolling and plunging as though we were the plaything of the brig, swept of her masts and spars, and like a log in the grip of Arctic ice in waters.

All that day they were the sport of wind and sea, and knew not what moment might be their last; so that though Julian slept from sheer exhaustion, it was but a few hours, widely when some unusually severe lurch of the wreck seemed to threaten her with the last minute had arrived.

Then the terrible night stretched out before them, with all its attendant horrors. Julian again crept out of the cabin to ascertain just what condition the brig was in, and found with some measure of sympathy from such of the crew as were huddled together on deck, being swept overboard.

Here he had his eyes gazed upon a more heart-breaking sight than that he found himself confronted by a big, strapping fellow, a sailor leaning over the door at the head of the companionway, the wreckage had been cleared away, and with a single blow of his clenched, doubtless, by axe in the hands of the sailors, but enough to disable a man, the stubby bow of the brig to keep her head into the sea, which, as we have already stated, had been the only thing that kept her from broaching-to long since, and foundering.

He found a drenched member of the crew who had been standing watch on deck, and doing in his exposed position, save that he might give warning to the fellows below of the worst came. Julian could not for the life of him see; but he managed to make some sentences out of the slow ere being chased back by an incoming sea.

Evidently the carpenter got the most hopeful of news, for half of the crew had gone over in the many furious gales, and the boats and the balance cowered under the hatches believing their time was only a matter of hours or minutes.

Surely no help could be expected from this quarter, since the crew were in a panic, and at such times it becomes every one for himself. Little they cared for the captain's daughter, and, as for the two lads, let them look out for themselves.

So Julian came back secretly discouraged, though he made out to appear a little more cheerful than he felt, and when the sailor that had settled down upon the occupants of the cabin, but he could see the gleam of the eyes of the girl, though she understood his gesticulations.

Even impending death may lose some of its terrors by familiarity, and as they had been shut up in the cabin now for two days, the occupants of the cabin fell asleep before the night was many hours old, for the mad waves that were tossing of the ill-fated bark serve to startle the ears of them from their slumbers.

Julian did awaken several times, and, finding that no change had taken place so far as he could tell, and that his companions still rested, he allowed himself to again drop off, unmindful of the morrow, for if death was bound to embrace them it might just as well come during their sleep as not, for then they would be less prolonged.

When he opened his eyes for the third time he was puzzled to find that the darkness had given place to daylight.

Then they still floated, and another night had flown, with all its attendant horrors. His heart throbbed with gratitude because of the mercies thus bestowed, and what gave him still deeper cause for thankfulness was the fact that while the poor old brig tossed up and down unmercifully, she was not in the grip of the tempest was lacking.

With a new hope struggling in his heart Julian sprang to his feet and hurried across the cabin to one of the bullseye windows, which he tore open with a trembling hand, for he felt as though fate hung in the balance.

Then he fell back with bated breath and a hot lips, for the clouds were broken and signs of sunrise began to appear. The typhoon had spent its force, and for the time being, at such a hurricane, and by degrees the sea was to subside, so that it would be safe to stand ere it could entirely lose its turbulent character.

What of the brig? She floated still, it was true, but there was that in connection with her roll that told Julian plainly enough how water-logged she had become through the straining received in the storm; after her masts went by the board and her seams were opened more or less. He knew she was not apt to hold out a great while longer, and that in all probability they would be compelled to trust themselves to a small boat, if so be one remained after the rush of water over the deck for forty hours.

The others had been aroused by his cry, and they, too, showed pleasure at the more hopeful prospect; for while the chances were still so decidedly slender, they offered such a contrast to what had faced them on the preceding night that hope began to grow again.

Even Tressie seemed to forget about her father for the time being, and let something like gladness shine upon her pale face, which fact set Julian to wondering, and he repented his mental vow to stand by this forsaken girl, even to the end.

They ate something with more relish than at any other time since their troubles began, and the mere act of taking nourishment served to imbue them with new strength and a spirit of cheerfulness that did much to buoy them up in such a trying time.

A council of war was held, at which the situation could be discussed unreservedly, even Tressie taking part, for there had been occasions, as both Julian and his friend knew, when she had proved of such a small girl had proven of value. Besides, she shared the danger with them, and it seemed only right that a portion of the responsibility should rest upon her shoulders.

It was decided that negotiations should be opened up with the mutineers at once looking to a surrender of the brig, for the chances of the men had chosen to completely ignore the title located to the cabin, became desperate indeed, and had grown almost reckless. In the time the brig fell into their hands, but now that the storm was over, and the fear of both of number away, and left them shortstanding, they would be glad to get a full consideration and receive the two lads into full fellowship, for they would be free from the guilty ones could cut and run to avoid punishment.

It was so easy to plan all this, sitting there about the table; but did Julian doubt his ability to carry out his portion of the bargain? Would he go forth and take his chances among the wolves?

"Please be careful," said the child appealingly. "Julian, you know I have no one for friends I can afford to lose even one."

Bob insisted upon thrusting some of his numerous bolos upon him, and a little later when Julian had fastened about his waist, because, as he explained, the sight of the murderous blade should be visibly impressed with the ferocious character of those who wished to join forces with them temporarily.

Thus accounted Julian strode out of the cabin, feeling not a little encouraged from the words and commendation from Bob, who seemed to look upon his friend as a sort of knight errant, as his "cousin from over the sea," as he loved to call him.

Julian reached the deck, though with some difficulty, for the brig seemed to be settling in the water, and the seas would break over and had shifted, as well as many leaks started. The boys had noticed all of these things during the night, for he had expected that the crew would try to keep afloat as long as possible, as it was to the hope of sighting land.

Now he gained the forlorn deck, a wilderness of ruin, and was amazed in wonder, for not a living soul was in sight, though he had heard the voices of the men but half an hour before. The dreadful truth broke upon him that they had given up the ship, and were from the storm, leaving the three young inmates of the cabin to shift for themselves upon the slowly foundering brig.

CHAPTER VIII.

MAKING AND MANNING A LIFE-RAFT.

Strangely enough, the first sensation which came to Julian upon discovering the utter flight of the crew was one of relief at getting rid of so undesirable an element, for he felt that they would have deserted ever what some they wretch might take it into his head to throw the rest of their dirty work upon the boys, a positive satisfaction.

Then, upon reflection of their impending peril broke upon him, he began to experience a cold chill, especially when the wreck of the brig gave a decided lurch as though preparatory to taking her last mad plunge.

He felt a sudden call to retain about was a serious question, and it began to look as though they would be compelled to take a hand in determining whether they left the wreck or went down with it.

He looked upon the heaving water and found that the brig was settling deeper and deeper, proving that by degrees they were losing their power to overwhelm any frail craft completed to the mercy of the angry waves.

He saw nothing of the deserters, though he strained his eyes looking in the quarter where they must have gone. Well, it was, after all, a good thing to get rid of such trash, and for one Julian hoped never to set eyes upon the unsavory rascals again.

Bob, he did believe, was then the only boat, and it seemed hard that with his two friends he should now be compelled to add to the worry a problem in the transportation line.

Julian knew that there were doubtless objects in plenty of which a stout and serviceable raft could be constructed, provided the builders had time in which to work, and that such problems may not be solved in a jiffy.

It was certain that whatever he and Bob set to work with as little delay as possible, while Tressie skirmished around and got together such supplies of food as were to be found.

Julian, being but a young chap, had distinct memories of Robinson Crusoe's experiences on his beloved isle, and while realizing something of the magnitude of the task confronting him, at the same time he could not but feel a little thrill of pleasure over the fact that he

I CURE FITS

When I say I cure I do not mean merely to stop them for a time and then have them return again. I mean a radical cure. I have made the disease of FITS, EPILEPSY or FALLING SICKNESS a life-long study. I warrant my remedy to cure the worst cases. Because others have failed is no reason for not now receiving a cure. Send at once for a treatise and a Free Bottle of my infallible remedy. Give Express and Post Office.

PROF. W. H. PEEKE, F. D., 4 CEDAR ST., N.Y.

When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

TELLS FUTURE 10c love, business and marriage, with Photo of future husband or wife, name and address, 10c. Gypsy Queen, Box 2, Fort Wayne, Ind.

When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger

HOME Of school carnal and without interest. Rent money done it. Write for system. New Jap BUYING Nelson Real Estate & Title Co., Lansing, Mich.

When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

OPIUM Habit Tobacco Cure for Morphine, Opium, Whiskey, Cocaine, Tobacco, Habits. Nervousness, Impotency, Stammering, Stomach Troubles, Blood poisons fully restored. Confidential. Write today. DR. KLINE INSTITUTE, Suite 307, 44 Van Buren, Chicago.

When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

X-RAY CATHODOSCOPE Latest pocket exciter, sees through clothing, flesh, wood, etc. Sent C. O. D. subject to examination before delivery. Send 10c. for sample picture. Agents wanted. Catalogue free. Address, CLYDE SUPPLY CO., Dept. 1, Cincinnati, O.

When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

OLD SORES CURED

Allen's Electric Salve cures Chronic Ulcers, Bone, Fever Sores, Scrofulous Sores, Indolent Ulcers, Mercurial Ulcers, White Swelling, Milk Leg, Boils, Carbuncles, Cancer, Eczema, Salt Rheum, Piles. By mail 50c. J. P. ALLEN, Dept. 76, Paul, Minn.

When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

BRASS BAND Instruments, Drums, Uniforms. Low prices. Write for free catalogue. Lyon & Healy, 62 Adams St., Chicago. Lowest prices. Best Band Music. 1000 Waltzes, Marches, Two-Steps, Barn Dances, Overtures for amateur bands. LYON & HEALY, 62 Adams St., Chicago.

When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

WETO GRAPH

The Great Secret Writing System.

FOR LOVERS AND OTHERS

Every lover and every one who writes letters should have a Weto Graph. It is a system of secret sign writing for correspondence, etc. If you have a Weto Graph you can preserve your secret correspondence. Any child can learn it. Information you do not want anyone to find out. No one write to have secrets. Weto Graph is the only one of that you have written. Send 25 cents and we will send you Weto Graph by mail, with full instructions. Address, PENN PUBLISHING CO., PARNASSUS, PA.

When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

500 SHAVES for 25c.

Without a razor, without soap, without water. Simply rub on Magic Shaving Stick, which removes with ease the strongest beard, leaving the face as soft as it were the face. The wonder of the age. Harmless, safe, Practical. No mussy preparation needed. Always ready for use. Good for 500 shaves. Will last a lifetime. Sold for years. Beep upside the table, stamp, and we will send you one by return mail. Agents wanted. Big profits. Duplicating Stick Co., Dept. 1, Boston, Mass. Try one and be convinced.

When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

New Line. Fine Service.

Minneapolis and St. Paul

Fast "Limited" night train, with stateroom and observation sleeping car, buffet-library car, and free reclining chair cars. Two other fast trains daily. Low rates. Ask agent.

A. H. HANSON, G. P. A., CHICAGO.

When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

This book contains hundreds of wonderful things for Boys & Girls. Stamps, Coins, Curiosities, Games, Tricks, Puzzles, Jokes, Magic, Conundrums, Love Letters, Physiology, Fairy Tales, etc. It is filled with stories by the thousand. Don't buy fakes. This is the genuine. One book by mail, postpaid, 10 cents, 3 for 25 cents. Address, BRADAW LEDGER, Room 401, 1 Beekman St., CHICAGO, ILLS.

When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

was thrown upon his own responsibility, and had serious problems to solve.

He had just turned with the idea of calling the others on deck, so that they, too, might realize what confronted them, when he heard some sort of movement forward, and caught a glimpse of a human head peeping above the coaming of the forward hatch.

The prospect of having to face the muthous and ugly crew after all gave him a severe shock, and his hand involuntarily stretched out to secure some weapon from the strange assortment in his girdle, when to his delight the round object poked further into view, and he distinguished the well-known queue of Kwang Chow, queue and all, a broad grin upon his yellow phiz as he crawled lastily out upon the deck and advanced toward his friend.

Again Julian was overwhelmed by the evidence of devotion on the part of his humble Chinese admirer. Kwang could in all probability have found a seat in the boat that carried the balance of the crew away, and the temptation must have been strong within his pagan heart, yet he had resisted the same and ran away to hide in the forecastle or the swimming hold, so that they might not tempt his force by offering to remain behind and take his chances with Julian.

His warm reception by the overjoyed lad was reward enough for the stoical heathen, for Julian literally fell upon his neck, and, if he failed to weep as did Jacob of old when he found his long-lost son Joseph a ruler in Egypt, he at least showered the idolator with all manner of delightful phrases that must have been balm to his soul.

He did not question, believing that the facts were in plain as words could make them, and, besides, the necessity for haste in accomplishing their work of salvage pressed heavily upon him.

"Jump for it, Wang!" he shouted.

At his hail Bob and Tressie came hastily on deck, and when the warlike Briton first caught sight of the Chinaman in Julian's company he held in stays, so to speak, and made a few frantic grabs after the handiest cutlasses in his prize collection, whereat the other shouted out the truth and took him roundly that their number had been thus augmented by the addition of such a devoted fellow, with mouth to spare at their service.

And, indeed, the coming of Kwang was a godsend to the young marooners, for he excelled in strength, having been something of a local bandow in his native community, so that any heavy burdens that had to be taken care of were right in his sight.

The others entered into the spirit of the thing, and there was some lively hustling about the littered deck of the old brig.

In the excitement of the hour Tressie seemed to forget her grief, and carried out her part of the business with neatness and dispatch, gathering up such food products as they had embarked upon the raft at such a time as necessity compelled them to embark.

Meanwhile, under the instructions the three others were making rapid progress toward getting a roughly serviceable raft together. What they wanted was something that, while not a thing of beauty and a joy forever, would be capable of resisting the encroachments of the slapping waves, day by day, and even stand something of a blow if necessary.

Julian was a bit of a carpenter and capable of accomplishing things out of material that, to another's eyes, might have seemed meager enough; and as the loot chest happened to be above water he was able to seize upon such steel-shod implements of labor as best suited his purposes.

It sounded very odd to hear the merry clang of hammers upon the deck of that sinking old sea wanderer, mingled with the cheery calls of the workers; but under such driving as necessity compelled the thing took shape most marvelously, and Julian began to believe they would have plenty of time to complete the same with life-lines and even a rude mast, upon which a sail could be hoisted when the proper breeze blew.

It was policy for them to remain on the wreck just as long as it would be safe to do so, since the sea was growing less turbulent with every passing hour; at the same time, great care must be taken lest they overdo this and go to a point beyond what caution might dictate, for should they unfortunately linger until the brig was whelmed in the watery flood the chances would be exceedingly slim for both them and their sturdy raft.

Accordingly, it had been constructed on the leeward side with several objects in view, proving that the architect kept his wits about him and certainly did not mean to fall into the same error that attended the first attempt of those old Romans to construct a boat, which he had to abandon because it was too bulky for the dry ledge. First the raft could be thrown into the sea by their united force, and when freed from its controlling rope would be carried away from the side of the doomed vessel by wind and wave; whereas, had it been drawn over the windward side the sunction might have held it up against the brig until drawn down with the final plunge.

A keg of fresh water was securely lashed upon the float, after which they tumbled in over the side, Julian following in hot haste from their view with an almost human sob, all of them were visibly affected, and pale faces were turned upon each other.

A few bits of flotsam and that was all, for the brave old ship that had so long defied the fury of the wildest storms was sinking to the universal graveyard of her kind, where the mariners' caskets are the strange fishes and other denizens of the lower depths of the ocean might play at hide-and-seek amid her skeleton ribs.

Knowing that it was necessary for them to keep a heavy heart and not allow any symptom of despair to find a lodgment thus early in the affair, Julian assumed a cheerfulness he was far from feeling, and managed to buoy up the spirits of his fellow voyagers.

The future was an impenetrable mystery, and yet they must have faith to believe that they would not be allowed to perish if they did their part well.

The sail was soon thrown to the breeze, and while for a time it became a serious problem how the clumsy raft might be steered, a boy's ingenuity on the part of Sailor Bob remedied this defect, so that in the end they were gliding along at quite a fair pace, rising and falling gently upon the heaving bosom of the distant deep.

Tressie, finding that things moved so smoothly, called for the bedding of her protectors and tried the couch they fitted up near the center of the float, adding some of the rugs brought from the brig; she needed rest after all the excitement of the last few days and nights when she had utterly refused to exist her weary eyes.

Julian and Bob took back up against the mast, planning improvements and trying to figure out just what they should do in order to find safety. It was impossible to head in a measure for the west, where the coast lay, though no one knew whether they were one or five hundred miles away from the shore, such had been the violence of the storm, and their ignorance while shut up in the cabin as to the direction it was driving the brig.

He had secured from the captain's instruments, and while not altogether confident as to his ability to take an observation with accuracy, still he meant to make the attempt when high noon came; he had watched others carry out the program many times, and asked questions with a Yankee boy's natural curiosity, so that he was in possession of the main facts.

One thing he did not enjoy thinking about in the least, and that was the possibility of another storm; yet it was a condition that they might have to face sooner or later, for the hurricane season was upon the China Sea, when these terrific waterspouts followed each other with only a certain interval between.

Nothing could be done to make their condition more secure in such an event, and they

APPENDICITIS
Cured Without Knife

Remarkable Discovery of a Positive Cure For This Fatal Disease.

FULL INFORMATION SENT FREE.

The rapid increase of appendicitis in recent years has occasioned in nearly every person a fear of this fatal disease. This fear has been increased by the painful and dangerous method of treatment by operation. The discovery of an absolutely certain cure and preventative has therefore been hailed with delight. The New York Journal of October 12, 1902, devoted a half page to a description of the remarkable discoveries of Dr. M. H. Thomas. Since that time the doctor has cured hundreds of cases. Thousands of people suffering from what they supposed to be a chronic stomach or bowel trouble are in reality afflicted with chronic appendicitis. Dangerous and fatal operations may be avoided by taking Dr. Thomas' treatment. It is a positive cure and an absolute preventative, endorsed by the highest medical authorities of both continents. For complete information and a valuable book on appendicitis address

DR. M. H. THOMAS, Box L, Huntington, Ind.

MENDING TISSUE

The WONDER of the Age. So sewing or darning. Repairs clothing, silk, satin, cotton or goods, ribbons, fabrics of all kinds, kid gloves, fashionable hats, feathers, furs, and beauty shawls. Mends instantly. Will not wash out. Send 25c. for sample. Address Pease Publishing Co., Farmington, Me.

When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

FREE FARMS

The New Homestead law offers every man or woman a farm Free, here is sure for new land containing the new homestead law and the name and location of every United States Land Office. The book tells just where to get the land and exactly what to do and how to obtain the free farm. Tells about Oregon, Washington, Idaho, Montana, Florida, Texas, Kansas, Louisiana, Michigan, Minnesota, Mississippi, Missouri, Wisconsin, Nebraska, Nevada, New Mexico, N. Dakota, Oklahoma, Oregon, Utah, South Dakota, Washington, Wisconsin and Wyoming. You will find in this book how to secure free a Farm among the good things of life. Send 10c. in silver or stamps for a copy of the book, or for local farms in the south. Time is now running. Send 10c. for this new book. W. C. WATKINS & CO., 1215 Lewis Block, Pittsburg, Pa.

When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

Satisfied with Indian Territory.

"I came here two years ago; this is the center of the richest farming portion of this country.

"I have walked the snow drifts in Iowa, Wisconsin, Illinois, Indiana and Michigan, and am always glad to see those people, but we must meet, if at all, here in God's country. I would not take a snow-drift farm as a gift. Those people transferred to this climate and soil is the secret of our progress.

J. P. WOODS, Comanche, Indian Territory"

The country for the farmer—early springs, late falls, and mild winters.

Send twenty-five cents in stamps for a year's subscription to the Western Trail—it tells all about it.

Homeseekers' Excursions Southwest first and third Tuesdays each month. One fare plus $2.00 for the round trip; one-way tickets correspondingly low.

Rock Island System

JOHN SEBASTIAN, Passenger Traffic Manager, CHICAGO, ILL.

When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger. When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

To Ledger Readers.

Thousands of persons seeing The CHICAGO LEDGER are anxious to receive it regularly and we are making a very liberal offer. The annual subscription to the weekly CHICAGO LEDGER is $1.00, and everyone who sends in $1.00 within the next 30 days for a year's subscription will receive FREE a KING CAMERA with complete Outfit for Developing and printing. Instantaneous Shutter, Trays, Plates and all necessary Chemicals. We send the CAMERA FREE and prepay charges on it.

Remember you get The LEDGER for a year for $1.00. This is 52 weeks. THE CAMERA IS FREE. This is a magnificent offer, allowing you to get all the fine Continued Stories. The offer is good for 30 days from date of this paper.

The CHICAGO LEDGER is distinctly in the line of Progress. As a purveyor of Romance and Entertaining Literature it has no superior. No other American Family Paper illustrates its matter so profusely or with such care; no other periodical devoted to fiction and humor goes to the expense of using color work generally in its pages, as is done in THE LEDGER. Improvement is manifest in the quality of the stories published, and this improvement will continue. The new form of the LEDGER, sixteen pages instead of eight, makes it convenient to preserve the fascinating novels which appear in its pages, both for yourself and your friend's. By sending us $1.00 you get the LEDGER for one year and the KING CAMERA, which is a first-class CAMERA IN ALL RESPECTS. It takes picture 2 inches in size and is complete and ready for use. Embrace this splendid opportunity at once while the offer is open. Address,

CHICAGO LEDGER, BOYCE BUILDING, CHICAGO

I Cure Women

OF FEMALE DISEASES AND PILES

I Will Cure You So That You Will Stay Cured—Women No Longer Need Submit to Embarrassing Examinations and Big Doctor Bills.

To Show Good Faith and to Prove to You That I Can Cure You I Will Send Free a Package of My Remedy to Every Sufferer.

I hold the secret of a discovery which has never failed to cure women of piles or female weakness. Falling of the womb, painful menstrual periods, leucorrhœa, granulation, displacement never really cured by any treatment.

I now offer this priceless secret to the women of America, knowing that it will always effect a cure, no matter how long you have suffered or how many doctors have failed.

I do not ask any money, to take my unsupported word for this, although it is true as gospel. If you will send me your name and address, I will send you a trial package absolutely free, which will show you that you can be cured. The free trial packages alone often are enough to cure. Don't put off—write me for it, today.

Mrs. Cora B. Miller, Box No. 5 Kokomo, Ind.

When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

MAGIC DIP NEEDLE MAGNETIC GOLD EYE NEEDLES. Sold by Druggists. P. A. M. ACCESSORY, PALMYRA, Mo.

When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

SPORTING GOODS, DICE, CARDS, ROULETTE WHEELS. Dice, Cards and Anything in the Line. CATALOGUE FREE. Exton Mfg. Co., Box 1292, U. S., Chicago

When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

DON'T MARRY, DOCTOR or Lawyer, "Don't do a thing" till you see Dandy Walker's book by and by. Chuck full of lights on Human Nature, on Sense, Nonsense and pure Cussedness. When you're not a doctor, but don't like to, for pure devilment, you can't help reading it through. Don't be crazy mad for dollars. Send 10 cents for it. WALKER HILL BOOK CO., 129 East 28th Street, New York.

When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

A POSITIVE CURE

FOR MEN ONLY WITHOUT PUBLICITY OR MEDICINE

Allan's Soluble Medicated Bougies

Will Cure the Most Obstinate Cases. No Nauseous Dosing. Price, $2.00. Sold by Druggists. Send for Circular. Address, J. C. ALLAN CO., P. O. BOX 2906, - NEW YORK

When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

WETO GRAPH

The Great Secret Writing System

FOR LOVERS AND OTHERS

Every lover and every one who writes letters should have a Weto Graph. It is a system of secret signs and codes for correspondence, etc. If you have a Weto Graph you can preserve recipes, secure memorandums, etc., and the information you do not want anyone to find out. You can write to your friends on a postal card and no one but you and them can read it. Lots of fun to have a Weto Graph. Price, 25 cents. Stamps taken. Send for your Weto Graph by mail, with full instructions, at once.

YENS PUBLISHING CO., PARK AVENUE, PA.

When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

J.P. Those suffering from weaknesses which sap the pleasures of life should take Juven Pills. One box will tell a story of marvelous results. This medicine has more rejuvenating, vitalizing force than has ever been offered. Sent by mail in plain package upon receipt of this advertisement and $1. 2

Made by its originators C. I. Hood Co., props. Hood's Sarsaparilla, Lowell, Mass.

When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

BLOOD POISON

Has never usually absolutely unknown to the profession. Permanent cures in 15 to 35 days. We refund money if we do not cure. You can be treated at home for the same price and under the same guarantee, without additional charge, if you prefer to call at our office. Thousands of cases cured in every part of the world. If you have taken mercury or iodide potash and still have aches and pains, mucous patches in mouth, sore throat, pimples, copper colored spots, ulcers on any part of the body, hair and eyebrows falling out, it is this SECONDARY BLOOD POISON that we guarantee to cure. We solicit the most obstinate cases and challenge the world for a case we cannot cure. This disease has always baffled the skill of the most eminent physicians. We have cured thousands who had been pronounced incurable. We have the largest medical staff of any institution in the world devoted exclusively to this disease. We have cured cases of 30 years' standing in from 15 to 35 days. Our records prove this. Write for our book, "Blood Poison," sent free. If you prefer to call at office, we have an honest offer. Always use full address, as follows

COOK REMEDY COMPANY,
1720 Masonic Temple, Chicago, Illinois.

COOK REMEDY CO.

When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

Stricture

Long-sufferers, Quest, Lost Manhood, Bladder and Prostate Troubles and General debility of men positively cured by DR. KENNY'S PALMYRA STRICTURE CURE.

It eradicates every trace of stricture, allays pain, checks unnatural discharges, and makes you a new man in every way when 5 day. Thousands of men have testified to this fact. Why not you? Do not know it. Remember the name and you can get it at any drug store. We will say you to investigate this product. Write us for free booklet and testimonials of prominent men and write them. All correspondence confidential.

$1. To convince you that our remedy is an absolute and positive cure, we will mail you, prepaid, one month's treatment, on receipt of $1. Sold by druggists. Recovery is cured in Five Days.

D. A. SHEEN CO., 127 Sat Block, CINCINNATI, OHIO.

When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

must place their dependence on the Great Captain above. If days elapsed one another blast because dues they would at least have some chance for finding an opportunity for a change of base.

Once he stood up, holding by the stout stick that served as a mast, and searched in every direction for signs of land. There was none, but absolutely nothing rewarded him save some low-flying birds that he took to be members of the albatross species, found even in mid-ocean, since their vast wings the heaving wave and delight in the howling gale, just as does the stormy petrel.

As noon drew near the ocean had gone down considerably, and there was now nothing to hinder an observation, any direction where they no longer rose upon great rollers.

Tressa had awakened much refreshed and was asking numerous questions of Julian, which the had answered with considerable diplomacy, since it was his sincere design to comfort the girl without deviating from the truth; as time while he spoke cheerfully, and by word and act inspired his companions with hope, all the same he got the situation plainly before them, that one and all might realize just where their condition might be, and how important that they keep a constant lookout for succor.

Then came the test of the lunch question; indeed, Julian had some qualms of fear regarding the outstanding effect of Tressa's tears. They had had full swing with regard to the larder, knowing, as he did, the provisions that were possessed, and also the fact that should it become necessary for them to economize in the matter of provisions, they would be a poor hand at the helm.

When they had refreshed themselves after a fashion Julian gravely set about his task, while Gordon and Tressa sat by in the deepest anxiety, for upon the result much depended.

After the observation had been carried out with scrupulous exactness the young skipper sat him down and began to figure industriously with a piece of charcoal upon a piece of problem several times in order to prove himself correct, after which he was quite satisfied that he had made them out to be some two hundred and fifty miles to the westward and distant from the great island of Hainan to the south, with Uncle Sam's new possessions in the same direction, and also to the south and southeast; that they were almost directly on the twenty-fifth parallel of latitude and as near as he could figure something like one hundred and fifteen degrees westward from the longitude east of Greenwich, which announcement pleased Bob so greatly that he must needs swing his hat and cheer lustily.

Another installment of this interesting story of adventure in the South Seas will appear in next week's Ledger. Each subscriber, as announced on page thirteen, will be entitled to our free cameras and patterns.

The Facts About Our Cow.

BY MAX ADELER.

Last summer we bought a cow, so that we could have our own milk, and make our own butter, and get fresh cream for our coffee. She was a pretty little cow, with twisted horns, and the man who sold her to me said she was a capital milker, and that she had a splendid appetite. He said that she was the easiest cow with her feed that he ever saw; she would eat almost anything, and she was very fond of butter.

At the end of the first week after she came we concluded to churn. The hired girl churned the whole day at the crank, and about sunset the butter came. We got it all together, and found that we had a pound. Then I began to see how economical it was to make our own butter. A half pound at the store cost twenty cents. The wages of that man for the week were two dollars, and so our butter was costing us about four dollars a pound without the keep of the cow. Then we had to buy salt. That was so poor that we couldn't eat it, and I gave it to the man to grease the wheelbarrow with. It seemed somewhat luxurious and principal to furnish a cow for the purpose of supplying grease at four dollars a pound for the wheelbarrow, but it came in handy, and I suppose the credit came in. After about a fortnight our cow seemed so unhappy in her stable that we turned her out in the yard.

The first night she got loose she upset the grape arbor with her horns, and ate four young peach trees and a dwarf pear tree down to the roots. Next day she gave us her as much hay as she could eat, and it seemed likely that her appetite was appeased. But an hour or two afterward she swallowed six crocus bulbs that were lying upon the grass, and ate half of a tablecloth and a pair of drawers from the clothes-line. She was evidently getting very thin, and I attributed it to the indigestibility of the bulbs.

During the night she must have got to walking in her sleep, for she walked through the fence and hooked two of Cooley's pigs that were lying in the garden, and when Cooley was discovered considerably riled, one of Mrs. Cooley's waterproof skirts. That seemed to settle her appetite for the time being next month. It is simple harmless tonics that can be prepared at home. Send 10c. for Dr. Pierce's Book, "Plain Talks to Every suffering sister who writes to one. I have nothing to sell. This is a one afternoon helpful moment. Dr. Pierce. Address Mrs. A. Rutzer, South Bend, Ind.

A Delay.

A man who was walking along a country road was greatly surprised to find an old negro sitting upon a sign post bearing a finger pointing north, below which was printed "Chicago, 20 miles."

"What are you up there for?" asked the man.

"Patih," said the other, "I've been sittin' here for two hours an' I'm a wondering when it's going to start."

His Dog Couldn't Read.

An old negro of Joplin was complaining about losing his dog when his employer asked him why he didn't advertise for the animal in the newspapers. "Dat wouldn't do no good," returned the old man. "Why not?" asked his employer. "Well, you see, dog kain't read," responded the old negro.

BLOOD POISON

Can only be cured by the marvellous serum toxin discovered three years ago by Doctor Francis A. Sieber. This treatment can be taken at home with the same assurance of success as though administered at any one of the branch Institutes of this Company in Chicago, New York, Kansas City, St. Louis, Philadelphia, Hot Springs, etc. All pimples, eruptions, mucous patches, sore throat, aching bones, etc., disappear during the first month, and the very worst cases thoroughly cured during the second month. Thousands of these secondary cases accepted for treatment daily, guaranteed a complete cure or all money refunded. Serum toxin is the only human remedy that will cure blood poison can ever be found. Thousands have tried it and failed, but it will cure you. Write your own guarantee. Largest Medical Institute in the world, capital $1,000,000. Before writing us ask any Mercantile Agency, or your own banker, as to our financial responsibility and business standing. We send free, upon application, a treatise on constitutional or specific blood poison fully describing the Sieber serum treatment, and how you can be permanently cured while you remain at home and attend to your ordinary affairs.

International Serum Toxin Company
CAPITAL, $1,000,000
Suite 724 Metropolitan Block, New York City

When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

CARDS & DICE Perfect Work. Catalog FREE. J. KRAUSE MFG. CO., Southport, Ill.

When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

I WILL TELL Your Fortune by Long Distance Telephone with Name of Future Husband or Wife, Date of Marriage, Etc. Send 10c. to DR. PROF. LEVI, Rooms, Omaha, Neb.

When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

RODS The latest improved; sold under guarantee. Write for Catalogue. Agents Wanted. Rods, Reels, Lines, etc. Cut on cards. Address L. A. LOWRY, P.O. Box 1894 DENVER, Colo.

When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

OPIUM and Liquor Habit cured in 10 to 20 days. No pay till cured. Write DR. J. L. STEPHENS CO., Lebanon, Ohio.

When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

This ELEGANT Watch $3.75

Stem wind and stem set, handsomely engraved, open face, nickel silver case, guaranteed accurate timekeeper. Send your name and address, and we will send watch AND CHAIN by return mail. Pay $3.75 on arrival and if you think it the greatest bargain you ever saw, return it to us and we will refund your money. Send stamp for Ladies or Gent's Watch Catalogue. Mention this paper. Address H. HARRIS & CO., 125 Quincy St., CHICAGO.

When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

An Electric Belt Free

Send Your Application At Once To The Physician's Institute.

They Will Send You Absolutely Free One of These 100 Gauge Supreme Electric Belts, the Best While Gas Made or Many Wonderful Cures—You Needn't Send Even a Postage Stamp—Just Your Name and Address.

Seven years ago the State of Illinois granted to the Physician's Institute a Charter to cure Disease.

There was need of something above the ordinary remedies for the treatment of disease, something more than any one specialist or any number of specialists, working individually could do, so the State itself, under the powers of its Legislature, granted to the Physician's Institute the right to furnish to the sick and suffering their own remedies.

Ever since the establishment the Institute has endeavored in every way to bring the benefits of certain great discoveries, made by it, under the beneficial laws of the State.

Three years ago the Physicians' Institute, realizing the value of electricity in the treatment of certain diseases and the great benefit the superintendence of its staff could confer upon the sick, set to work to perfect a belt that would be of great value as a curative agent. From time to time it has been improved until to-day we claim that stage of perfection which warranted its present name of "Supreme."

This belt is the most effective of all agents in the cure of rheumatism, backache, lame back, nervous exhaustion, weakness or lost vital functions, kidney troubles, female weakness and other complaints.

The "Supreme Electric Belt" is made in one grade only—100 gauge—there is no better electric belt made and no better belt can be made. Whatever in the opinion of our staff of specialists the wonderful curative and revitalizing forces of electricity will cure you we send you, free of all cost, one of these Supreme Electric Belts. It is not cost on trial, it is yours to keep forever without the payment of one cent. This generous offer may be withdrawn at any time, so you should write to-day for this free "Supreme Electric Belt" to the Physicians' Institute, Suite 207 Unity Building, Chicago, Ills.

When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

Every Lady Read This.

Years ago when I was a sufferer, an old nurse told me of a wonderful cure for Leucorrhea, Displacements, Pain in the Back, Headache and General Debility. I tested the remedy and found it a simple harmless tonic that can be prepared at home. Send 10c. for Dr. Pierce's Book, "Plain Talks to Every suffering sister who writes to one. I have nothing to sell. This is a one afternoon helpful moment. Dr. Pierce. Address Mrs. A. Rutzer, South Bend, Ind.

Beauty Hints for Men.

By X. Sophi Mudd.

If your nose is inclined to take on a ruddier hue than is quite compatible with beauty, try a preparation made of lamp black and vaseline. Apply the mixture and allow it to remain on the nose as long as possible. Wash off with cold water as the red will not show.

If you have a bald spot on the top of your head it is a good plan to have the barber cut the hair all around the place, and then have a hairdresser bring the parted down flat to the bald spot.

If after shaving you wish to top at the top from wearing your hat pulled down to the eyebrows, rub the side of your head with a good strong glue. In two or three years you can overcome any tendency to baldness.

If your nose is not situated in the right place, remember that a mustache can set where it will look the best. Surgeons can do nothing for a bad nose.

If your lips are too thin, insert a pneumatic tube and blow them up. Seal the aperture and keep the tube and your lips will look ripe and luscious in no time.

If your hair is thin, cut off the remainder of your body, quit rubbering so much, and begin to concentrate your head about ten hours a day and if your head is inclined to run to a peak this will be remedied in a few months.

When your whiskers are inclined to be too curly, shave every other month at night. This will effect a cure in no time.

If your hair is inclined to grow one another and your whiskers still another, never mind. Variety is the spice of life and you are sure to attract much attention.

If your mouth is too large, have the corners sewed up and allow your mustache to droop down over the aperture.

If you are inclined to be stoop-shouldered, sleep on your back on a board several nights each week.

When you wish to look particularly pale before going to a party it is advisable to have a person frighten you badly before you start. Cosmetics or any other artificial might accommodate you.

Bathe your hands in honey with champagne added and your complexion will become as white as that of a corpse.

A Color Question.

Judge Pettigrew of South Carolina, was considered by many the judge who was a great stickler for etiquette, and when, one hot day in July, Pettigrew came into the court room in black coat and yellow nankeen trousers, the judge took him to task, asking him why he did not know that the rules of the court required its counsel to appear in the "proper and true trousers."

"Well, your honor," said Pettigrew, innocently, "I submit that I am within the rule, for I have on black coat and trousers."

"But they are not black trousers." insisted the court. "Black coat and trousers' means that both shall be black."

"Then," said Pettigrew, "I call your honor's attention to the fact that the sheriff of this court is in contempt of its rules, for he appears in court in white pantaloons and in a 'cocked hat and sword,' and while his hat seems to be correct, his military regularity is not."

The judge said no more about the trousers.

A Color Question.

Judge Pettigrew of South Carolina, was considered by many the judge who was a great sticker for etiquette, and when, one hot day in July, Pettigrew came into the court room in black coat and yellow nankeen trousers, the judge took him to task, asking him why he did not know that the rules of the court required its counsel to appear in the "proper and true trousers."

"Well, your honor," said Pettigrew, innocently, "I submit that I am within the rule, for I have on black coat and trousers."

"But they are not black trousers." insisted the court. "Black coat and trousers' means that both shall be black."

"Then," said Pettigrew, "I call your honor's attention to the fact that the sheriff of this court is in contempt of its rules, for he appears in court in white pantaloons and in a 'cocked hat and sword,' and while his hat seems to be correct, his military regularity is not."

The judge said no more about the trousers.

Singularité.

Smuggling was carried on with great boldness in England a century ago. When Samuel Pellew was appointed collector of customs at Falmouth early last century he found corruption the chief characteristic of the service. One day he surprised a party of his own men attempting to smuggle in a cargo of wine in broad daylight. Pellew, who was a conscientious man, so worried the smugglers that they threatened his life repeatedly and posted bills offering a reward for his assassination. One smuggler, who kept a public house, erected a battery of guns to defend his illicit goods and when a shot or two exhibited what he considered a too inquisitive spirit actually fired on her. The vessel's guns were too low to reply with effect, but her crew landed in boats, attacked the house in the rear and leveled it to the ground.

Commenting on an appropriation of $25,000 made the other day by the London County Council for the purchase of flower bulbs for the parks the London Chronicle says: "It is impossible to say how many hundreds of thousands of daffodils, tulips, snowdrops, crocus, iris and hyacinths the County Council will get for the money, but one may estimate how few single specimens might be bought for that sum. Thus, if the parks committee put all the money in the large new white trumpet daffodil 'Peter Barr,' offered for the first time last spring, they would get only nine bulbs; while if their patriotic instinct decided them to invest in 'Lord Roberts' (yellow trumpet) at 15 guineas a head they would be lucky to get forty."

A recent issue of the London Lancet dwells on the dietetic advantages of coffee. Those whose digestion is disturbed by drinking hot coffee are advised to make use of its stimulating properties by taking it in the form of jelly. A clear coffee jelly after dinner is said to be every bit as good as the hot infusion, while it is free from some of the drawbacks. Coffee, unlike alcohol, diminishes organic waste and raises the muscular energy without the collapse which follows alcoholic inhibition and gelatin in the form of jelly is cooling, assuages thirst, is soothing and has a tendency to absorb any excessive acidity of the stomach.

He Had Taken His Nap.

The friendly and familiar atmosphere of the average small rural Western church sometimes gives rise to embarrassments. Doctor David is a prominent man in a little far Western church and he generally takes a quiet little doze during the sermon. Sister Sarah is an elderly, long-winded woman, who likes to "exhort" after the preacher has concluded his remarks. Not long ago, at a night service, Sister Sarah arose and discovered a great length. The listeners became visibly restive. Doctor David also arose and said, bluntly:

"Sister Sarah, it would be an imposition to detain this congregation any longer."

With flashing eyes Sister Sarah retorted: "Tain't no imperseition on you, Doctor; you've tuck your nap."

Then the clergyman, with uplifted hands, said benignly: "Let us be dismissed."

Never Knew It Before.

A burly old skipper and his scarcely less burly mate, feeling hungry on coming on shore, went into a restaurant at Southampton and ordered a "table dotty" dinner. In a few minutes a waiter approached, and, with considerable flourish, placed a plate of thin watery-looking liquid before each of them.

"Hi, me lad, wot's this stuff?" shouted the captain, gazing in amazement at the concoction under his nose.

"Soup, sir," replied the waiter.

"Soup!" shouted the old sea dog. "Soup! By gum, Bill!"—turning to the mate—"just think of that! 'Ere's you and me been sailing on soup ort our lives and never knowed it till now."

Prepared.

"How does your nephew like it out in Kansas?"

"He likes it well enough I guess. He writes me that he's going to stay there. He's got both a tornado cave and a flood tower on his farm."

FREE TO WEAK MEN

A DISCOVERY OF A REMEDY HAS BEEN MADE THAT RESTORES LOST MANHOOD AND GIVES MAN THE VITALITY OF A LION.

ONE WEEK'S TRIAL PACKAGE SENT FREE TO ALL MEN WHO WRITE FOR IT.

Regenerative Tablets is the only recognized positive and permanent cure for Lost Manhood in all its forms and stages.

It is scientifically prepared by the best chemists in the world. The reputation of the institution is such, that all physicians know when they stand sponsor for a remedy, that remedy must be exactly as represented. And when upon their reputation they make the statement that Regenerative Tablets will cure all cases of Lost Manhood, Spermatorrhoea, Varicocele, or weakness of any nature of the nerve or sexual organs, a cure must be positive and permanent. This Company will send every person who is suffering from nervous diseases a week's treatment absolutely free. There is but one test of genuine medicine and that is the results which are obtained by its use; if it cures the disease for which it is prepared it is a true remedy. This is the test by which the Fulgora Lyon Co. wish their one week free treatment to be tried. After using Regenerative Tablets one week, the sufferer will find new vigor in his organs; new force in his manhood; new blood in his veins; new ambition, a new man in vitality, health and appearance. Regenerative Tablets has a peculiarly gratifying effect and the patient feels the first day's use. It goes to the root of the trouble, no matter of how long standing, gives the strength and vitality necessary to make a perfect and complete cure where it is needed. This marvelous remedy overcomes all forms of nervousness, impotency, spermatorrhoea, sexual errors and all the ills and troubles that are the result of the indiscretions of youth and maturer years, and which result in premature loss of vitality and manhood, nervousness, impotency and spermatorrhoea. Regenerative Tablets will effect a cure at any age, there is no case that it will not cure permanently except where epilepsy or insanity has already been reached. Fulgora Lyon Co. make no restrictions, every person who writes will get a one week's free trial sent absolutely free and postpaid, carefully wrapped in a plain package with no writing on it to tell what is contained. They have several thousands of letters from people all over the world telling of the most astonishing cures made by Regenerative Tablets. Their one week free trial is genuine, and no embarrassing questions asked. Write today to the Fulgora Lyon Co., 1 Fulgora Building, Chicago, Ill., and they will send you by return mail a treatment free; their book which is also free, will tell you all the free treatment you will have to take the treatment in private and cure yourself at home.

When Writing Mention Chicago Ledger.

Beautiful Patterns Free---An Unparalleled Offer.

The patterns shown below are furnished us by one of the best, if not the best, pattern manufacturers in New York. They illustrate the very latest styles, and are unexcelled for accuracy in fit, simplicity in use, and are most economical of purchase. They sell from the stores from twenty-five to fifty cents each. Full instructions accompany each pattern. Any subscription to the CHICAGO LEDGER for 50 cents and any TWO of these patterns will be sent FREE. No matter if you are wise you will take advantage of this offer.

REMEMBER, in all mistakes, you must first give the number of the Pattern wanted—second, do not fail to give your measure for waist, or waist measure if skirt is wanted—third, be very particular to write your name and address plainly, and fourth, do not fail to enclose money.

PATTERN DEPT., CHICAGO LEDGER, CHICAGO, ILL.

4448 COFFEE COAT 32-40 BUST.

4444 TUCKED JACKET 32 40 BUST.

4447 NIGHT GOWN 32-40 BUST.

4471 PLAIN SHIRT WAIST 32-40 BUST.

4445 WOMANS SKIRT 22-30 WAIST.

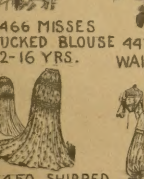
4457 WALKING SKIRT 22 30 WAIST.

4452 CIRCULAR SKIRT 22-30 WAIST

4466 MISSES TUCKED BLOUSE 12-16 YRS.

4470 MISSES WAIST 12-16 YRS.

4463 WALKING SKIRT 22-30 WAIST.



4450 SHIRRED SKIRT 22-30 WAIST.

4449 TUCKED BLOUSE 32-40 BUST.

30 COMPLETE NOVELS FREE!

HERE THEY ARE!

Guilty or Not Guilty, by Amanda M. Douglas.
An Old Man's Sacrifice, by Mrs. Ann S. Stephens.
Between Man and Woman, by Charles Garvice.
The Mystery of Jacob's Well, by Miss Agnes G. Austin.
A Bartered Life, by Madeline Hardinge.
The Secret Cipher Tragedy, by Mrs. Anne G. Austin.
The Doctor's Secret, by Miss M. E. Braddon.
The Fatal Ring, by Miss Louis Stevenson.
Her Husband's Honor, by Mrs. Mary Kyle Dallas.
Two Roses of Inverness, by Mrs. Mary Grace Halpine.
A Soldier's Story, by Rudyard Kipling.
My Fellow Laborers, by M. Rider Haggard.
Her Sister's Sacrifice, by Florence M. Kingsley.
Rose Lodge, by Mrs. Henry Wood.
A Secret Sorrow, by Miss Louise Stevenson.
The Wife's Victory, by Charles Garvice.
In the Holidays, by Mary Cecil Hay.
Wife Wedded, Wife Won, by Mrs. Alex. Graham.
The Linden Farm Bride, by Margaret Blount.
The Other Woman's Husband, by Mrs. Alex. Graham.
Love Marriage, by Miss Mulock.
Wife and Widow, by Charles Garvice.
Lady Jim, by Mrs. Alex. Graham.
The Name Cut on a Gate, by Mary Cecil Hay.
Less Than Lovers Dare, by Mrs. Henry Wood.
The Blatchford Bequest, by Hugh Conway.
The Nightingale Mystery, by Charles Garvice.
Darrell Haskell, by Mrs. Jane G. Austin.
A Life's Revenge, by Mrs. Alex. Graham.
Lilian's Love Story, by M. T. Calder.
In One Short Year, by Charles Garvice.

WOMAN'S WORLD, 34 Boyce Building, Chicago, Ill

SPECIAL OFFER If you will simply raise a club of two yearly subscribers to Woman's World at our special price, 25 cents per year, we will send you the above 30 complete novels postpaid free. Address Woman's World, Boyce Building, Chicago, Ill.

When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger. When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

BOYS WANTED TO SELL THE BLADE AND LEDGER.

We want a boy in every town to act as agent. We start you without asking a cent in advance. Fill out the blank below and we will send you a bundle of BLADES AND LEDGERS by mail, also report blanks, instructions and certificate of agency. You report each week, paying only for papers you sell. You keep 2 cents out of every 5 cent sale and send us 3 cents. In this way you can earn a nice sum each week. No experience necessary. We send full instructions so you can begin at once. Tear out the coupon below and send it in.

W. D. BOYCE CO., Boyce Building, Chicago.

GENTLEMEN: I would like to be your agent. agree to pay you for all papers I sell, less my commission. I also agree to report every week. Please send me a bundle of papers, report blanks, etc Yours truly,

Name.....

Street..... Town.....

Date..... State.....

Rheumatism

Does not let go of you when you apply lotions or liniments. It simply loosens its hold for a while. Why? Because to get rid of it you must correct the acid condition of the blood on which it depends. Hood's Sarsaparilla has cured thousands.

When Writing Mention Chicago Ledger.

I FORE TELL Any Subject Taken in Love, Business, with PROOF of Unerring Accuracy. Send Birthdate and Stamp for Trial Reading. Prof. D. YARR, 2237, Grand, Kansas City, Mo.
When Writing Mention Chicago Ledger.

MAKE YOUR HOME Pay for your own home. Write for free list and system. New England Real Estate and Title Co., Bangor, Maine
When Writing Mention Chicago Ledger.

MOTHERS Evaseline cures. Self-settling. Sample free. Dr. F. E. May, Box 213, Bloomington, Ill.
When Writing Mention Chicago Ledger.

PATENTS PROTECT YOUR IDEAS. Send for our Guide Book. HIGH CLASS WORK. 3 YRS. PRACTICE. 3 YRS. REFERENCE. 3 YRS. ESTABLISHED. 3 YRS. SUCCESS. 3 YRS. WASHINGTON.
When Writing Mention Chicago Ledger.

A GOD-SEND TO PILE SUFFERERS. Turnpaugh cured never to return, by my discovery. No Cut. Shot if fails. Test free for two stamps. Rev. N. W. Turnpaugh, last field sec., Philadelphia, Pa.
When Writing Mention Chicago Ledger.

FREE HOROSCOPE Your Past and Future told. TOLD by Astrology. Love, Marriage and all questions answered. Send birthdate and 2 stamps for it. Magnus, San Francisco, Cal.
When Writing Mention Chicago Ledger.

PERMANENT RHEUMATISM CURE. The medicine is from a German specialist. Cures in 1 to 3 days. Send 25c. and 2c. per bottle. C. O. D. Adv. CHEMIST KOCH & CO., Box 27, Syracuse, N. Y.
When Writing Mention Chicago Ledger.

Heirs Wanted [illegible] Address Royal Explorer, P.O. Box [illegible]
When Writing Mention Chicago Ledger.

MYSELF CURED I will gladly inform any addicted to COCAINE, MORPHINE, OPIUM OR LAUDANUM, of a never failing painless Home Cure. Address MRS. E. MARY BALDWIN, P.O. Box 1278, Chicago, Ill.
When Writing Mention Chicago Ledger.

TWO RINGS FREE

Send us your name and we will send you free, one of our handsome Jewelry novelties. Sell them at 10 cents each. When you send us the $1.20 and we send you back both of these Solid Gold Set Rings. Address ONLAND MANUFACTURING CO., Dept. 8 N.R., 84 Pine Street, New York the WONDER of the Age. To sewing or darning. Repairs clothing, silk, satin, cotton goods, ribbons, fabrics of all kinds, kid gloves, mackintoshes, umbrellas, parasols, stockings, etc. No sewing, yet soft. 10 packages, 10 cents. Agents Outfit Free. Address Consolidated Mending Tissue Co., Parkesburg, Pa.
When Writing Mention Chicago Ledger.

MENDING TISSUE

When Writing Mention Chicago Ledger.

$5.98 SOLID GOLD WATCH Write what kind you want. American movt. full jeweled Elgin or Waltham, 20 year gold case, hunting or open face, ladies' or gents' size, we will send you one on approval for 5 days. If you like it pay us $5.98 and it is yours. If not return it. We will give you a written guarantee to keep it in order for 25 years. Address, SOLID GOLD WATCH CO., 185 Dearborn St., Suite 1214, Chicago.
When Writing Mention Chicago Ledger.

NEW SONGS FREE Under the Maple Tree. To Be Used Till Some Other Time. When the Great Morning Comes. Oh, Oh, Oh, Mr. Dreamer, Wake Up. Sweet Rose of Mine. Don't Feel No Restless Lonely. My Pet. Goodnight, Dear Heart, Goodnight. Sweet Rose of Mine. Sweet Rose of Mine. Sweet Rose of Mine